R. Loftus, E. F. Loftus, 2019-01-15 Over the past 20 years the study of human memory has become an increasingly popular topic of study for psychologists and since the late 1960s a new framework for studying memory has begun to take shape It is the purpose of this book to present a broad overview of this framework including descriptions of 1 the major theoretical components of the framework and 2 the critical research findings that justify the establishment of these components and illuminate the mechanisms by which they operate The book is not meant to constitute an exhaustive review of the enormous research literature that has accrued over the years The authors deliberately avoid wading into masses of detail on any given topic area and we deliberately sidestep a number of current theoretical controversies Instead this book has been planned to be a guide and an introduction for the student or interested layman with little or no background in the area of memory as a field of psychological inquiry

Outers' Book-recreation ,1922 Memory Lane Ciara Greene, Gillian Murphy, 2025-03-04 Making Memories describes the science of how memories are constructed and reconstructed revealing

how this process of making and remaking memories which has strengths but also introduces vulnerabilities is central to the formation of our identities Rather than retrieving memories fully formed from long term storage memories are reconstructed every time we attempt to recall them The way in which memories are reconstructed can lead to errors and distortions and even to entirely false memories The authors describe the consequences of these memory errors including faulty eyewitness identifications and susceptibility to misinformation Greene and Murphy also discuss the effects of memory distortion in our lives both negative and positive The downsides of memory distortions are considerable however the authors make the point that they arise not as some anomaly or failure of evolution but rather as a by product of a perfectly imperfect process that evolved to solve problems in our ancestral environment These flaws are perhaps better thought of as features as they help to make us who we are and enable us to go about our lives and make sense of our experiences The problems arise when we have unrealistic expectations of our memories for example if we expect them to record our experiences like a video camera perfectly preserving the past which they do not

Method In Madness Peter W. Halligan, John C. Marshall, 2013-11-12 In clinical neuropsychiatry case studies provide invaluable demonstrations of the range and types of unusual psychological states that can occur after brain damage In the pursuit of objectivity and scientific respectability however many academic reports of neuropsychiatric disorders appear cold contrived and impersonal The essence and character of the patient's experience and behaviour is easily obscured or even lost a fact that cannot help researchers therapists and other practitioners to relate their conceptual knowledge to the flesh and blood people they meet in their professional lives In practice much of the actual discourse of such patients has been ignored as unworthy of scientific interest This book describes real patients in a clear and jargon free way These cases should serve to reduce the discrepancy between the formal representations of psychiatric illness in the mainstream literature and the reality of people struggling to make sense of their own predicament in everyday life
