Early Medieval Europe Christopher Tadgell,2001 This book traces the development of architecture in the territories of those who saw themselves as heirs to the Romans Charlemagne in the west and the Russian Czars in the east Each developed their inheritance in parallel with the attempt to develop their empires In the west church planning conformed to the typical early Christian basilican formula Development culminated in the idea of heaven as a palace prefigured here on earth by the church with God as supreme architect The conception of the church door as triumphal arch presided over by Christ the Judge is perhaps the most powerful theme of Romanesque art In the Russian empire the late Byzantine formula for planning was most commonly followed the type is represented by a string of impressive buildings from Kiev to Moscow The influence of the east led to the development of characteristic forms and nowhere is the synthesis of the oriental and occidental more bizarre than in the Cathedral of the Intercession in Moscow the pre eminent symbol of the third Rome Four Caliphates Christopher Tadgell,1998 This volume shows how Islamic conquests brought contact with Egyptian Persian and Chinese traditions and produced magnificent mosques palaces tombs and courtyard houses Perceptions of the Body and Sacred Space in Late Antiquity and Byzantium Jelena Bogdanovic,2018-04-09 Perceptions of the Body and Sacred Space in Late Antiquity and Byzantium seeks to reveal Christian understanding of the body and sacred space in the medieval Mediterranean Case studies examine encounters with the holy through the perspective of the human body and sensory dimensions of sacred space and discuss the dynamics of perception when experiencing what was constructed represented and understood as sacred The comparative analysis investigates viewers recognitions of the sacred in specific locations or segments of space with an emphasis on the experiential and conceptual relationships between sacred spaces and human bodies This volume thus reassesses the empowering aspects of space time and human agency in religious contexts By focusing on investigations of human endeavors towards experiential and visual expressions that shape perceptions of holiness this study ultimately aims to present a better understanding of the corporeality of sacred art and architecture The research points to how early Christians and Byzantines teleologically viewed the divine source of the sacred in terms of its ability to bring together but never fully dissolve the distinctions between the human and divine realms The revealed mechanisms of iconic perception and noetic contemplation have the potential to shape knowledge of the meanings of the sacred as well as to improve our understanding of the liminality of the profane and the sacred World History Encyclopedia [21 volumes]

Architectural Publications Index ,1998 Subject Guide to Books in Print ,1971 Constantinople Dr. Rebecca Stephens Falcasantos,2020-06-02 As Christian spaces and agents assumed prominent positions in civic life the end of the long span of the fourth century was marked by large scale religious change Churches had overtaken once thriving pagan temples old civic priesthoods were replaced by prominent bishops and the rituals of the city were directed toward the Christian God Such changes were particularly pronounced in the newly established city of Constantinople where elites from various groups contended to control civic and imperial religion Rebecca Stephens Falcasantos argues that imperial Christianity was in fact a manifestation of traditional Roman religious structures In particular she explores how deeply established habits of ritual engagement in shared social spaces ones that resonated with imperial ideology and appealed to the memories of previous generations constructed meaning to create a new imperial religious identity By examining three dynamics ritual performance rhetoric around violence and the preservation and curation of civic memory she distinguishes the role of Christian practice in transforming the civic and cultic landscapes of the late antique polis Japan Christopher Tadgell,2000 The history of the people of the Japanese archipelago has been moulded by an idiosyncratic conservatism admitting or even forcing change but supplementing rather than supplanting existing institutions The same characteristics have shaped the development of architecture with foreign influences and forms principally from China absorbed and gradually transformed This long tradition of transformation is the subject of Japan the informal contained The Japanese are the masters of the asymmetrical and the direct relationship between building and nature The former can be seen in the contrast between the first imperial cities laid out on a formal grid under the influence of Tang China and the organic growth of towns in and around the precincts of forts and castles as foreign influence receded As Chinese influence waned and ritual was elaborated moreover the native predilection for informality and studied simplicity achieved its full expression in both shrine and house Zen Buddhism introduced during a period of military rule in the thirteenth century also lead to the development of garden design not a literal reproduction of nature but abstraction calculated to elicit a subjective response

Bogdanovic, 2017-06-19 The Framing of Sacred Space offers the first topical study of canopies as essential spatial and symbolic units in Byzantine rite churches. Centrally planned columnar structures typically comprised of four columns and a roof canopy had a critical role in the modular processes of church design from actual church furnishings in the shape of a canopy to the church's structural core. As architectonic objects of basic structural and design integrity, canopies integrate an archetypal image of architecture and provide means for an innovative understanding of the materialization of the idea of the Byzantine church and its multi-focal spatial presence. The Framing of Sacred Space considers both the material and conceptual framing of sacred space and explains how the canopy bridges the physical and transcendental realms. As a crucial element of church design in the Byzantine world, a world that gradually abandoned the basilica as a typical building of Roman imperial secular architecture, the canopy carried tectonic and theological meanings and through vaulted canopied bays and recognizable Byzantine domed churches established organic architectural symbolic and sacred ties between the Old and New Covenants. In such an overarching context, the canopy becomes an architectural parti, a vital concept and dynamic design principle that carries the essence of the Byzantine church. The Framing of Sacred Space highlights significant factors in understanding canopies through specific architectural settings and the Byzantine concepts of space, thus also contributing to larger debates about the creation of sacred space and related architectural taxonomy.
