

Effects of the gaps in these clusters draw your eye! Repetition is a powerful, controlled and organizing force in visual art and interior space creation. This is evident whenever we related when you first experiencing a design that uses repetition in the space to a particular focal point.

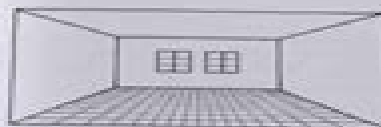

Magic tricks with lines

Lines are one of the most powerful visual tools in your disposal when working on interior design and style. By using the lines in a room, such as in terms of furniture, walls or wallpaper, you can create optical illusions that trick the eye and have the effect of enlarging or shrinking, emphasizing or minimizing. So when planning your home and trying to work out where to position things, it is important to be aware of such lines and your thinking.

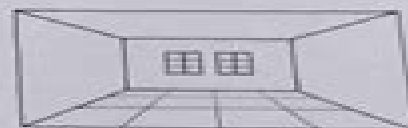

Leading lines

Interior designers often employ the term 'leading lines'. What they are referring to is the use of lines to lead the eye to the place or the object they want to be focused on. When photographers are composing a picture and deciding where the subject is to be positioned in the photograph, they often use natural lines in the surrounding environment to create a feeling of depth and direction. An interior designer or stylist can work in the same way to achieve depth in the design.

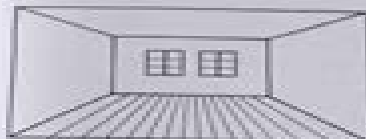

Some lines already exist in a building – the floor, walls and mouldings – but when we create the furniture depending on the interior design we choose, from furniture, for instance, to rugs. Even light and shadow can create strong lines depending on where they fall during the day. We can also use empty spaces, such as the gaps between pieces of furniture and other items, to direct the gaze in a particular direction. And we can consciously group objects in a particular way to emphasize a line.

This is a diagonal line (shown here) to open up and extend a room.

This line changes the floor? Choose a rug with lines that create the effect you want.
