Internal Geography:

Maps Edward Augustus Freeman, 1882      Curriculum Practice Martyn Hammersley, Andy Hargreaves, 2012 When first published this book was one of the first collections of empirical research in the area of the knowledge transmitted in schools and the responses of students to it. It includes studies of the histories of particular school subjects and of how the knowledge they embody is presented in the classroom. Attention is also given to the effects of gender stereotypes among teachers and pupils both on pupils' selection of courses to study and on their reactions to particular subjects in the classroom. The other major topic in this collection is the way external examinations shape the nature of the school curriculum and how it is taught. There are studies of how pupils and teachers adapt to the exam system and of how that system and its role in the accountability of schools have changed in recent years. The articles collected here throw into relief important aspects of what is taught in schools and they do this on the basis of a solid foundation of empirical research.

Complexity and Geographical Economics Pasquale Commendatore, Saime Kayam, Ingrid Kubin, 2015-02-17 The uneven geographical distribution of economic activities is a huge challenge worldwide and also for the European Union. In Krugman's New Economic Geography economic systems have a simple spatial structure. This book shows that more sophisticated models should visualise the EU as an evolving trade network with a specific topology and different aggregation levels. At the highest level economic geography models give a bird's-eye view of spatial dynamics. At a medium level institutions shape the economy and the structure of financial and labour markets. At the lowest level individual decisions interact with the economic, social and institutional environment; the focus is on firms' decision on location and innovation. Such multilevel models exhibit complex dynamic patterns: path dependence, cumulative causation, hysteresis. On a network structure and specific analytic tools are necessary for studying strategic interaction, heterogeneity and nonlinearities.

The Law Magazine and Review, 1912      The Internal Geography of Trade Thomas Farole, 2013-05-03 Economic theory including endogenous growth, the role of institutions and most importantly the New Economic Geography (NEG) have made significant progress in explaining the emergence of core-periphery patterns behind this divergence. They point to the critical role of agglomeration which confers benefits to metropolitan cores that have the advantages of large markets, deep labor pools, links to international markets and clusters of diverse suppliers and institutions. Regions relatively near the metropolitan core are likely to benefit from spillovers and congestion-related dispersion. Regions further outside the core, however, are not only less able to take advantage of spillovers but also more likely to be far removed from key infrastructural, institutional and interpersonal links to regional and international markets. As a result they face significant challenges to becoming competitive locations to host economic activity. Thus the geographical pattern of core and peripheral regions is increasingly manifest in an economic pattern of leading and lagging regions.

Inventiones Monika Otter, 2000-11-09 Combining literary theory and historiography Monika Otter explores the relationship between history and fiction in the Latin literature of twelfth century England The beginnings of fiction have commonly been associated with vernacular romance but Otter demonstrates that writers of Latin historical narratives also employed the self-referential techniques characteristic of fiction Beginning with inventiones a genre dealing with the discovery of saints' relics Otter reveals how exploring the fundamental problems of writing history and the nature of truth itself leads monastic or clerical Latin writers to a budding awareness of fictionality According to Otter accounts of conquests treasure hunts descents into underground worlds and efforts usually unsuccessful to retrieve subterranean objects serve as self-referential metaphors for the problems of accessing and retrieving the past they are thus designed to shake the reader's faith in historical representation and highlight the textuality of the historical account Otter traces this self-conscious use of fictional elements within historical narrative through the works of William of Malmesbury Geoffrey of Monmouth Gerald of Wales Walter Map and William of Newburgh Originally published in 1996 A UNC Press Enduring Edition UNC Press Enduring Editions use the latest in digital technology to make available again books from our distinguished backlist that were previously out of print These editions are published unaltered from the original and are presented in affordable paperback formats bringing readers both historical and cultural value
