England For A Change:

Identities and Social Change in Britain since 1940 Mike Savage, 2010-05-13 Identities and Social Change in Britain since 1940 examines how between 1940 and 1970 British society was marked by the imprint of the academic social sciences in profound ways which have an enduring legacy on how we see ourselves It focuses on how interview methods and sample surveys eclipsed literature and the community study as a means of understanding ordinary life The book shows that these methods were part of a wider remaking of British national identity in the aftermath of decolonisation in which measures of the rational managed nation eclipsed literary and romantic ones It also links the emergence of social science methods to the strengthening of technocratic and scientific identities amongst the educated middle classes and to the rise in masculine authority which challenged feminine expertise This book is the first to draw extensively on archived qualitative social science data from the 1930s to the 1960s which it uses to offer a unique personal and challenging account of post war social change in Britain It also uses this data to conduct a new kind of historical sociology of the social sciences one that emphasises the discontinuities in knowledge forms and which stresses how disciplines and institutions competed with each other for reputation Its emphasis on how social scientific forms of knowing eclipsed those from the arts and humanities during this period offers a radical re thinking of the role of expertise today which will provoke social scientists scholars in the humanities and the general reader alike

Forest Policies and Social Change in England Sylvie Nail, 2008-05-08 Forestry has been witness to some dramatic changes in recent years with several Western countries now moving away from the traditional model of regarding forests merely as sources of wood Rather these countries are increasingly recognizing their forests as multi purpose resources with roles which go far beyond simple economics In this innovative book Sylvie Nail uses England as a case study to explore the relationships between forests society and public perceptions raising important questions about forest policy and management both now and in the future Adopting a sociological approach to forest policy and management the book discusses the current validity of the two principles underlying forestry since the Middle Ages first that forestry should only exist when no better use of the land can be made and second that forestry itself should be profitable The author stresses how values and perceptions shape policies and conversely how policies can modify perceptions and also how policies can fail if they do not take perceptions into account She concludes that many of the issues facing English forestry in the 21st century from leisure health and amenity provision through education and rural as well as urban regeneration to biodiversity conservation go well beyond both national borders and the scope of forestry Indeed forestry in the 21st century seems to be less about planting and managing trees than about being a vector and a mirror of social change This novel synthesis provides a valuable resource for advanced students and researchers from all areas of natural resource studies including those interested in social history socio economics cultural geography and environmental psychology as well as those studying landscape ecology environmental history policy analysis and natural resource management Climate Change Adaptation in Developed Nations James D. Ford, Lea Berrang-Ford, 2011-06-27 It is now widely accepted that adaptation will be necessary if we are to manage the risks posed by climate change What we know about adaptation however is limited While there is a well established body of scholarship proposing assessment approaches and explaining concepts few studies have examined if and how adaptation is taking place at a national or regional level

Rais Akhtar, 2024-01-01 The objective of the present edited book is to encompass studies from both developed and developing countries of Asia Africa Europe and Americas to understand and present a comparative scenario of the climate change and other environmental determinants of health and disease in geographically diversified countries Environment and health perspective dates back to Hippocrates treatise written 400 B C E In his book On Airs Waters and Places Hippocrates described diseases as associated with environmental conditions Whoever wishes to investigate medicine properly should proceed thus in the first place to consider the seasons of the year and what effects each of them produces for they are not at all alike but differ much from themselves in regard to their changes Then the winds the hot and the cold especially such as are common to all countries and then such as are peculiar to each locality We must also consider the qualities of the waters for as they differ from one another in taste and weight so also do they differ much in their qualities In the same manner when one comes into a city to which he is a stranger he ought to consider its situation how it lies as to the winds and the rising of the sun for its influence is not the same whether it lies to the north or the south to the rising or to the setting sun There has been a greater emphasis in the last four decades on understanding environmental factors which affect human health after United Nations established Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change IPCC in 1988 aimed at to evaluate research on changing environmental condition particularly climate change and its impacts on human wellbeing including human health as consequences of extreme heat waves conditions sea level rise forced migration air pollution droughts and wildfires From these studies risk levels of vulnerable populations and regions can be assessed and level of resilience of healthcare infrastructure that may be used in
