Fenwick de Porquet, 1851 Word as Bond in English Literature from the Middle Ages to the Restoration J. Douglas Canfield, 2016-11-11 For centuries the transmission of power in feudal European society depended on a code of fidelity of political allegiance and truth to one s word The word as bond extended to include not only the pledge of allegiance between subject and king but the troth plight between lovers the vow of friendship and the judicial oath Society was ultimately based upon a gentleman s or gentlewoman s word that was itself underwritten by the Word of God J Douglas Canfield argues that English literature of the feudal epoch placed this master trope of word as bond at the center of conflict The trope does not passively reflect social reality rather it helps to define to constitute the society and its values Both society and literature were preoccupied by the contest between fidelity on the one hand and its antithesis betrayal with the political and sexual anarchy that it threatened on the other In literature the conflict was usually resolved through supernatural aid the intervention of the Logos which guaranteed the validity of the word Canfield analyzes over 25 representative works focusing on Chaucer Shakespeare and Dryden in the five dominant modes of aristocratic literature romance comedy lyric tragedy and satire In each chapter he offers three examples one from the Middle Ages one from the Renaissance and one from the Restoration Canfield s study proceeds synchronically attempting to show that the trope is always under stress The language of heroic romance coexists with the language of subversive comedy and absurdist satire In an Afterword he suggests why the trope disappears not from the discourse where it remains to this day but from the center of conflict in English literature after 1688

Pioneering in the Far East, and Journeys to California in 1849 and to the White Sea in 1878 Ludvig Verner Helms, 2024-04-06 Reprint of the original first published in 1882

Making of the English Literary Canon Trevor Thornton Ross, 1998 It is widely accepted among literary scholars that canon formation began in the eighteenth century when scholarly editions and critical treatments of older works designed to educate readers about the national literary heritage appeared for the first time In The Making of the English Literary Canon Trevor Ross challenges this assumption arguing that canon formation was going on well before the eighteenth century but was based on a very different set of literary and cultural values Covering a period that extends from the Middle Ages to the institutionalisation of literature in the eighteenth century Ross s comprehensive history traces the evolution of cultural attitudes toward literature in English society highlighting the diverse interests and assumptions that defined and shaped the literary canon An indigenous canon of letters Ross argues had been both the hope and aim of English authors since the Middle Ages Early authors believed that promoting the idea of a national literature would help publicise their work and favour literary production in the vernacular Ross places these early gestures toward canon making in the context of the highly rhetorical habits of thought that dominated medieval and Renaissance culture habits that were gradually displaced by an emergent rationalist understanding of literary value He shows that beginning in the late seventeenth century canon makers became less concerned with how English literature was produced than with how it was read and received By showing that canon formation has served different functions in the past The Making of the English Literary Canon is relevant not only to current debates over the canon but also as an important corrective to prevailing views of early modern English literature and of how it was first evaluated promoted and preserved It is widely accepted among literary scholars that canon formation began in the eighteenth century when scholarly editions and critical treatments of older works designed to educate readers about the national literary heritage appeared for the first time In The Making of the English Literary Canon Trevor Ross challenges this assumption arguing that canon formation was going on well before the eighteenth century but was based on a very different set of literary and cultural values Covering a period that extends from the Middle Ages to the institutionalisation of literature in the eighteenth century Ross s comprehensive history traces the evolution of cultural attitudes toward literature in English society highlighting the diverse interests and assumptions that defined and shaped the literary canon An indigenous canon of letters Ross argues had been both the hope and aim of English authors since the Middle Ages Early authors believed that promoting the idea of a national literature would help publicise their work and favour literary production in the vernacular Ross places these early gestures toward canon making in the context of the highly rhetorical habits of thought that dominated medieval and Renaissance culture habits that were gradually displaced by an emergent rationalist understanding of literary value He shows that beginning in the late seventeenth century canon makers became less concerned with how English literature was produced than with how it was read and received By showing that canon formation has served different functions in the past The Making of the English Literary Canon is relevant not only to current debates over the canon but also as an important corrective to prevailing views of early modern English literature and of how it was first evaluated promoted and preserved
