Modelling Spatial Housing Markets Geoffrey Meen,2012-12-06 Spatial fixity is one of the characteristics that distinguishes housing from most other goods and services in the economy In general housing cannot be moved from one part of the country to another in response to shortages or excesses in particular areas The modelling of housing markets and the interlinkages between markets at different spatial levels international national regional and urban are the main themes of this book A second major theme is disaggregation not only in terms of space but also between households The book argues that aggregate time series models of housing markets of the type widely used in Britain and also in other countries in the past have become less relevant in a world of increasing income dispersion Typically aggregate relationships will break down except under special conditions We can no longer assume that traditional location or tenure patterns for example will continue in the future The book has four main components First it discusses trends in housing markets both internationally and within nations Second the book develops theoretical housing models at each spatial scale starting with national models moving down to the regional level and then to urban models Third the book provides empirical estimates of the models and finally the models are used for policy analysis Analysis ranges over a wide variety of topics including explanations for differing international house price trends the causes of housing cycles the role of credit markets regional housing market interactions and the role of housing in urban suburban population drift Annual Editions ,1993 Report of the ...
