

THE CARBON BUDGET

The international consensus of climate experts is clear: The world is warming, and it's largely due to human activities. We're now living on a planet where global temperatures are warmer than most of the past 11,000 years.

The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) recently identified the world's "carbon budget," the amount of carbon dioxide that can be emitted if we are to have a likely chance of averting the most dangerous of climate change impacts. The world is currently on track to spend the remainder of this budget in just three decades.

Here's a look at the implications of exceeding the carbon budget—as well as actions the world can take to stay within it:

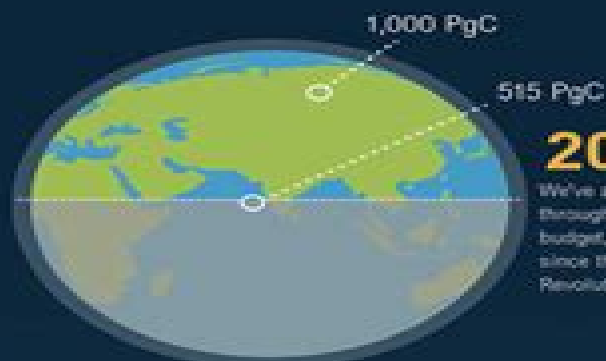

WHAT IS THE CARBON BUDGET?

The carbon budget is the estimated amount of carbon dioxide the world can emit while still having a likely chance of limiting global temperature rise to 2°C above pre-industrial levels. The international scientific community estimates this budget to be 1 trillion tonnes of carbon (1,000 PgC).*

2°C

The 2°C target has been adopted by the countries within the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC).
