enjoyable hours all went well But about three o'clock came a disappearance of the sun and a suspicious darkening of the sky and lowering of temperature before long snow began to fall and in a fashion with which I a Southerner was not at all familiar It was thick it was blinding it was persistent it speedily obscured tracks and heaped itself up in hollows I began to have visions of being lost in it And between five and six o'clock I found myself in this position as far as I could make out from my pocket map I was at some point of the Angle between the Cheviot Cairn Hill and Hedgehope Hill and at the western extremity of Harthope Burn but for all practical purposes I might as well have been in the heart of the Andes I could just make out the presence of the three great hills but I could see nothing of any farmstead or dwelling what was worse no house wayside inn or village was marked on my map that is within any reasonable distance As for a path I had already lost the one I was on and the snow by that time had become a smooth thick white carpet in front of me I might be safe in stepping farther on that carpet and I might sink into a hole or bog and be unable to get out And the nearest indicated place Middleton was miles and miles away and darkness was coming and coming quickly The exact spot in which I made these rough reckonings was at the lee side of a coppice of young fir whereat I had paused to rest a while and to consider what was best to be done Clearly there was only one thing to do to struggle on and trust to luck I prepared for that by taking a pull at my flask in which fortunately there was still half its original contents of whisky and water left and finishing the remains of my lunch But the prospect that faced me when I presently left my shelter and rounded the corner of the coppice was by no means pleasant The snow was falling faster and thicker and darkness was surely coming It looked as if I was either to struggle through the snow for more miles than I knew of or be condemned to creep under any shelter I could find and pass a miserable night But even then my bad luck was on the turn Going onward and downward from off the moorland towards the valley I suddenly realised that I had struck some sort of road or made track it was hard and wide as I ascertained by striking my stick through the snow at various places And just as suddenly a little way farther to the east I saw bright and beckoning the lights of a house
