Job Creation And Destruction:

Job Creation and Destruction Steven J. Davis, John C. Haltiwanger, Scott Schuh, 1996 Using the Longitudinal Research Data constructed by the Census Bureau focuses on the U S manufacturing sector from 1972 to 1988 and develops a statistical portrait of the microeconomic adjustments to the many economic events that affect businesses and workers Describes in detail the relationship between job creation and destruction and employer characteristics including the relationship of job creation to employer size industry wage level and productivity performance The Natural Survival of Work Pierre Cahuc, André Zylberberg, 2006 How to manage the unemployment that occurs in the process of the continuous job destruction and creation responsible for growth in today s economies what recent economic research tells us about wages incentives to work and education Job Creation, Job Destruction, and International Competition Michael W. Klein, Scott Schuh, Robert K. Triest, 2003 Looks into the costs and benefits of labour market reallocation of US manufacturing industries Includes a review of the literature on implications of gross flows for the costs of labour adjustment to international factors Concludes that gross job flows may influence gross worker flows and therefore human capital investment wages and worker welfare Job Creation and Destruction Prakash Loungani, Bharat Trehan, 1997 Technological Progress, Job Creation and Job Destruction Dale Mortensen, 1995 Small Business and Job Creation Steven J. Davis, John C. Haltiwanger, Scott Schuh, 1993 This paper investigates how job creation and destruction behavior varies by employer size in the U S manufacturing sector during the period 1972 to 1988 The paper also evaluates the empirical basis for conventional claims about the job creating prowess of small businesses The chief findings and conclusions fall into five categories 1 Conventional wisdom about the job creating prowess of small businesses rests on misleading interpretations of the data 2 Many previous studies of the job creation process rely upon data that are not suitable for drawing inferences about the relationship between employer size and job creation 3 Large plants and firms account for most newly created and newly destroyed manufacturing jobs 4 Survival rates for new and existing manufacturing jobs increase sharply with employer size 5 Smaller manufacturing firms and plants exhibit sharply higher gross rates of job creation but not higher net rates Job Creation and Job Destruction in the U.K. Manufacturing Sector Jozef Konings, 1993 Based on a survey of 993 manufacturing companies Reports an average job creation rate of 1.6 per cent and an average job destruction rate of 5.6 per cent between 1972 and 1986 The Asymmetric Effects of Monetary Policy on Job Creation and Destruction Pietro Garibaldi, 2003 This paper presents theory and evidence on the asymmetric effects of monetary policy on job creation and job destruction Tight policy increases job destruction and reduces net employment changes Conversely easy policy appears ineffective in stimulating job creation Labor Markets, Employment Policy, And Job Creation Lewis C. Solmon, 2019-03-07 This clear accessible volume provides a comprehensive overview of the ongoing debate over the determining factors of and key influences on employment growth and labor market training education and related policies in the United States Drawing on the work of distinguished labor economists the chapters tackle questions posed by job and skill demands in the new high tech economy and explore sources of employment growth productivity growth and its implications for future employment government mandates labor costs and employment and labor force demographics income inequality and returns to human capital These topics are central concerns for government which must judge every prospective policy proposal by its effects on employment growth Washington keeps at least one eye firmly on the jobs picture and public officials at every level are constantly aware of the issues surrounding American job security The jobs issue reaches beyond this focus on the unemployment rate and on total employment including the rate at which employment is seen as growing the growth of real wages the security of employment returns to human capital uncertainty about the education and training best suited for a world of rapidly changing economic conditions and the distribution of the gains from growth across economic classes and population groups

Trend Employment Growth and the Bunching of Job Creation and Destruction Christopher L. Foote,1998 Job Creation and Destruction in Massachusetts: Gross Flows Among Industries , The Federal Reserve Bank of Boston presents the full text of the article entitled Job Creation and Destruction in Massachusetts Gross Flows Among Industries written by Katharine L Bradbury The article appeared in the September October 1999 issue of the New England Economic Review The text is available in PDF format Bradbury studies employment swings in Massachusetts and finds that most of the activity in job expansion has been associated with job creation particularly in nonmanufacturing sectors

Gross Job Creation, Gross Job Destruction and Employment Reallocation Steven J. Davis,John C. Haltiwanger,1991 This study measures the heterogeneity of establishment level employment changes in the U S manufacturing sector over the 1972 to 1986 period We measure this heterogeneity in terms of the gross creation and destruction of jobs and the rate at which jobs are reallocated across plants Our measurement efforts enable us to quantify the connection between job reallocation and worker reallocation to evaluate theories of heterogeneity in plant level employment dynamics and to establish new results related to the cyclical behavior of the labor market Role of Firms in Job Creation and Destruction in U.S. Manufacturing , The Federal Reserve Bank of Boston offers the full text of the article entitled The Role of Firms in Job Creation and Destruction in U S Manufacturing written by Scott Schuh and Robert K Triest The article was published in the March April 2000 issue of the New England Economic Review The text is available in PDF format This paper studies the role of firms and corporate reorganization in the determination of job creation and destruction The authors find that most job flows are between firms for small firms but intrafirm flows dominate for large firms Job Creation and Destruction in Hungary Gabor Korosi,2003 The paper analyses the process of corporate job creation and destruction after the transformational recession in Hungary Dynamic firms created jobs at an extraordinary speed before 1996 but downsizing companies destroyed jobs with similar intensity Even though there were substantial differences among sectors most sectors had high job reallocation rates This contrasts sharply with developments in most transition economies

Gross job creation is the sum of job creation at existing companies with increasing employment and job creation of the de novo firms. Unfortunately, it is hard to identify de novo firms in the Hungarian statistical system. Companies routinely got new corporate identifiers especially in the first half of the 1990s when their official organizational form was changed, e.g., they were corporatized without any real change in the operation of the company. This practice obviously inflates gross job allocation rates. We define narrow gross reallocation as the sum of sectoral job reallocation at firms with continuing corporate identifiers net job reallocation at the sector. There obviously were a number of real de novo firms in Hungary in this period and many firms went through substantial reorganizations, mergers, and break-ups when the change of the identifier was fully justified. Thus the narrow gross job reallocation rate was certainly underestimated the intensity of job churning in the Hungarian economy. However, even these narrow measures were much higher than the gross job reallocation at other transition economies: the narrow rate was more than 15% in all years between 1993 and 2000. The intensity of both job creation and destruction decreased somewhat by the late 1990s but it was still rather high by international standards. This high intensity of job creation and destruction coincided with a rather stable employment situation at the aggregate level: aggregate employment only increased by 3% between 1993 and 2000. Earlier studies of the characteristics of Hungarian corporate labour demand showed that demand elasticities converged to the levels seen in the least flexible West European labour markets. The coexistence of a stable macroeconomic situation, inflexible labour demand, and the intensive job reallocation at the firm/sectoral level is the result of a rapid and deep restructuring of the corporate sector. Rapid job reallocation was just a byproduct of the fast and very substantial differentiation of the companies, and this differentiation is strongly linked to the intensive foreign direct investment into the Hungarian economy.

Assessing Job Flows Across Countries John C. Haltiwanger, Stefano Scarpetta, Helena Schweiger, 2006. This paper reviews the process of job creation and destruction across a sample of 16 industrial and emerging economies over the past decade. It exploits a harmonized firm-level data set drawn from business registers and enterprise census data. The paper assesses the importance of technological factors that characterize different industries in explaining cross-country differences in job flows. It shows that industry effects play an important role in shaping job flows at the aggregate level. Even more importantly, differences in the size composition of firms within each industry explain a large fraction of the overall variability in job creation and destruction. However, even after controlling for industry technology and size factors, there remain significant differences in job flows across countries that could reflect differences in business environment conditions. The authors look at one factor shaping the business environment, namely regulations on hiring and firing of workers. To minimize possible endogeneity and omitted variable problems associated with cross country regressions we use a difference in difference approach The empirical results suggest that stringent hiring and firing costs reduce job turnover especially in those industries that require more frequent labor adjustment Regulations also distort the patterns of industry size flows Within each industry medium and large firms are more severely affected by stringent labor regulations while small firms are less affected probably because they are partially exempted from such regulations or can more easily circumvent them NBER Macroeconomics Annual 1990 Olivier Blanchard, Stanley Fischer, 1990 This is the fifth in a series of annuals from the National Bureau of Economic Research that are designed to stimulate research on problems in applied economics to bring frontier theoretical developments to a wider audience and to accelerate the interaction between analytical and empirical research in macroeconomics Olivier Blanchard and Stanley Fischer are both Professors of Economics at MIT Contributors Ricardo Caballero Giuseppe Bertola Andrew Caplin Robert Hall Gur Ofer Abram Bergson Martin Weitzman Francesco Giavazzi Marco Pagano Allan Drazen Martin Feldstein Steven Davis John Haltiwanger Katharine Abraham Robert Townsend Mark Bilal Andrew Oswald Gary Hansen Robert Barro Xavier Sala i Martin William Brainard Robert Lucas Job Creation, Job Destruction and the Role of Small Firms Alexander Hijzen, Richard Upward, Peter W Wright, 2010 Evidence on job creation and destruction for the United Kingdom is limited dated and refers almost entirely to the manufacturing sector We use firm level data from 1997 to 2008 for almost all sectors including services and show that firms in the service sector exhibit much higher rates of job creation but almost exactly the same rates of job destruction as those in manufacturing Small firms account for a disproportionately large fraction of job creation and destruction relative to their share of employment Jobs created by small firms are no less likely to persist than those created by large firms Trade Effects on Job Changes Through Job Creation and Destruction Responses Masahiro Endoh, 2019
