State-Led Privatization in China Jin Zeng, 2013-10-01 Large scale privatization did not emerge spontaneously in China in the late 1990s Rather the Chinese state led and carefully planned ownership transformation with timetables and measurable privatization quotas not for the purpose of extracting the state from the economy but in order to strengthen the rule of the Party While it is widely believed that authoritarian regimes are better suited than democracies to carry out economic reform this book provides a more nuanced understanding of reform in China demonstrating that the Chinese state s capacity to impose unpopular reform is contingent on its control over local state agents and its adaptability to societal demands Building on rich fieldwork data gathered in three Chinese cities Shenyang Shanghai and Xiamen this book offers the first comparative study of China s privatization processes at the local level Instead of focusing solely on political elites Jin Zeng adopts a multi level interaction approach to examine how the complex interplay of the central leadership grassroots officials and state owned enterprise managers and workers shaped the contour of privatization in China The book advances three central arguments First local economic structure and cadre evaluation system mediated local officials incentives to initiate privatization Second local officials relied on mobilization campaigns and various appeasement measures to implement privatization Finally the dynamics of privatization were fundamentally driven by the central government's reactions to social opposition and by the subsequent responses of local officials to the changed political regulatory environment As a detailed analysis of the dual transformation of the property regime and state society relations in China this book will be invaluable to students and scholars of Chinese politics economic reform as well as those interested in comparative political economy and economic development more broadly

Expanding Job Opportunities in Ghana Maddalena Honorati, Sara Johansson de Silva, 2016-10-24 Ghana was until very recently a success story in Africa achieving high and sustained growth and impressive poverty reduction However Ghana is now facing major challenges in diversifying its economy sustaining growth and making it more inclusive Most of the new jobs that have been created in the past decade have been in low earning low productivity trade services Macroeconomic instability limited diversification and growing inequities in Ghana's labor markets make it harder for the economy to create more jobs and particularly better jobs Employment needs to expand in both urban areas which will continue to grow rapidly and rural areas where poverty is still concentrated The current fiscal and economic crisis is heightening the need for urgent reforms but limiting the room for maneuver and increasing pressure for a careful prioritization of policy actions Going forward Ghana will need to consider an integrated jobs strategy that addresses barriers to the business climate deficiencies in skills lack of competitiveness of job creating sectors problems with labor mobility and the need for comprehensive labor market regulation Ghana needs to diversify its economy through gains in productivity in sectors like agribusiness transport construction energy and information and communications technology ICT services Productivity needs to be increased also in agriculture in order to increase the earnings potential for the many poor who still work there In particular Ghana's youth and women need help in connecting to these jobs through relevant skills development and services that target gaps in information about job opportunities Even with significant effort most of Ghana's population will continue to work in jobs characterized by low and fluctuating earnings for the foreseeable future however and they will need social safety nets that help them manage vulnerability to income shortfalls More productive and inclusive jobs will help Ghana move to a second phase of structural transformation and develop into a modern middle income economy
