Afar in the Forest William Henry Giles Kingston, 2020-09-28 The question was put to my uncle Mark Tregellis whom I found seated in front of our hut as I returned one evening from a hunting excursion it having been my duty that day to go out in search of game for our larder Uncle Mark had just come in from his day's work which had been that of felling the tall trees surrounding our habitation He and I together had cleared an acre and a half since we came to our new location It was a wild region in which we had fixed ourselves Dark forests were on every side of us To the north and the east was the great chain of lakes which extend a third of the way across North America Numberless mountain ranges rose in the distance with intervening heights some rugged and precipitous others clothed to their summits with vegetation Numerous rivers and streams ran through the country one of which on whose banks we purposed building our future abode passed close to our hut Besides the features I have described there were waterfalls and rapids deep valleys and narrow gorges penetrating amid the hills while to the south west could be seen from the higher ground near us the wide prairie extending away far beyond human ken Wild indeed it was for not a single habitation of white men was to be found to the westward and on the other side beyond the newly formed settlement in which Uncle Stephen resided but few cottages or huts of the hardy pioneers of civilisation and these scattered only here and there existed for a hundred miles or more
