

Introduction and Overview to Strategic Management

Lesson 1. Definition of Strategic Management

Strategic management can be defined as the art and science of formulating, implementing, and evaluating cross-functional decisions that enable an organization to achieve its objectives (David, 2011). This definition implies that strategic management focuses on integrating management, marketing, finance/accounting, productions/operations, research and development, and information systems to achieve organizational success.

Peter Drucker says the prime task of strategic management is thinking through the overall mission of a business:

...that is, of asking the question, "What is our business?" This leads to the setting of objectives, the development of strategies, and the making of today's decisions for tomorrow's results. This clearly must be done by a part of the organization that can see the entire business; that can balance objectives and the needs of today against the needs of tomorrow; and that can allocate resources of men and money to key results.

A strategic plan is, in essence, a company's game plan. Just as a football team needs a good game plan to have a chance for success, a company must have a good strategic plan to compete successfully. It results from tough managerial choices among numerous good alternatives, and it signals commitment to specific markets, policies, procedures, and operations in lieu of other, "less desirable" courses of action.

The term strategic management is used at many colleges and universities as the subtitle for the capstone course in business administration. This course integrates material from all business courses. (David, 2011)

Lesson 2. The Strategic Management Process

The strategic management process is the full set of commitments, decisions, and actions required for a firm to achieve strategic competitiveness and above-average returns (Hamel, 2007 in Hitt, et.al, 2020). It consists of three stages: strategy formulation, strategy implementation, and strategy evaluation.

Strategy formulation includes developing a vision and mission, identifying an organization's external opportunities and threats, determining internal strengths and weaknesses, establishing long-term objectives, generating alternative strategies, and choosing particular strategies to pursue. Strategy-formulation issues include deciding what new businesses to enter, what businesses to abandon, how to allocate resources, whether to expand operations or diversify, whether to enter international markets, whether to merge or form a joint venture, and how to avoid a hostile takeover.

Because no organization has unlimited resources, strategists must decide which alternative strategies will benefit the firm most. Strategy-formulation decisions commit an organization to specific products, markets, resources, and technologies over an extended period of time.

Strategy implementation requires a firm to establish annual objectives, devise policies, motivate employees, and allocate resources so that formulated strategies can be executed. It includes developing a
