Forms and Functions of Humor in Indigenous Films, 2019-07-02 Seminar paper from the year 2017 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Culture and Applied Geography grade 2 0 University of Frankfurt Main language English abstract This term paper focuses on the comparison between two Indigenous films Boy by Taika Waititi and Bran Nue Dae by Rachel Perkins on the basis of forms and functions of humor that are presented in both films Comparing these two films the viewer might immediately ask the question why the depiction of historical trauma of the two peoples M ori and Aborigines is presented in a comical manner These films are classified as dramedies It does not mean that a dramedy is a comedy with dramatic elements or vice versa it s a genre of drama that is defined by stories focusing on character development intense emotions and inner conflict as the primary source of plot In these films humor has been selected as a main tool to illustrate the problems of these two nations that have been confronted with social segregation in New Zealand and Australia For this reason such a tragicomically represented humor serves as a difficulty for its appropriate perception on the viewers part In the movies the plot revolves in 1969 in Australia and in 1984 in New Zealand so explicitly in the times of the national revival of Aborigines and Maori Then after centuries of discrimination they were given full rights and became full fledged members of society So a mix of tragedy and comedy is not a coincidence since the Indigenous people who have come through a lot of tragedy had then a reason to cheerfully celebrate their newly obtained equal status

Film, Art, and the Limits of Science Malcolm Turvey, 2025-04-26 There is currently a vigorous debate in film studies and related disciplines about the extent to which scientific paradigms like evolutionary psychology and neuroscience can explain the cinema and other artforms This debate tends to devolve into extreme positions with many film scholars and other humanists insisting that science has little or no role to play in the study of the arts while a minority contends that it is always needed to fully account for cultural phenomena like film Malcolm Turvey advocates for a more moderate position He argues that while the sciences can explain much about film and the other arts there is much about these phenomena that only humanistic methods can account for He thereby mounts a trenchant defence of the purpose and value of humanistic explanation one that nevertheless acknowledges and welcomes the legitimate contribution of the sciences to the study of the arts
