Architecture and the Mimetic Self Lucy Huskinson, 2018-02-02 Buildings shape our identity and sense of self in profound ways that are not always evident to architects and town planners or even to those who think they are intimately familiar with the buildings they inhabit Architecture and the Mimetic Self provides a useful theoretical guide to our unconscious behaviour in relation to buildings and explains both how and why we are drawn to specific elements and features of architectural design It reveals how even the most uninspiring of buildings can be modified to meet our unconscious expectations and requirements of them and by the same token it explores the repercussions for our wellbeing when buildings fail to do so Criteria for effective architectural design have for a long time been grounded in utilitarian and aesthetic principles of function efficiency cost and visual impact Although these are important considerations they often fail to meet the fundamental needs of those who inhabit and use buildings Misconceptions are rife not least because our responses to architecture are often difficult to measure and are in large part unconscious By bridging psychoanalytic thought and architectural theory Architecture and the Mimetic Self frees the former from its preoccupations with interpersonal human relations to address the vital relationships that we establish with our nonhuman environments In addition to providing a guide to the unconscious behaviours that are most relevant for evaluating architectural design this book explains how our relationships with the built environment inform a more expansive and useful psychoanalytic theory of human relationship and identity It will appeal to psychoanalysts and analytical psychologists architects and all who are interested in the overlaps of psychology architecture and the built environment

Shades of Green Ian Frederick Finseth, 2009-01-01 Shades of Green offers a creative reimagining of early and antebellum American literary culture by exploring the complex web of relationships linking racial thought to natural science and natural imagery The book charts a dynamic shift in both polemical and imaginative literature during the century before the Civil War as scientific artistic and spiritual vocabularies regarding nature became increasingly important for authors seeking to mobilize public opinion against slavery or to redefine racial identity Finseth argues that these vocabularies both liberated and constrained antislavery philosophy and more broadly that our understanding of race in early American literature must take the natural world into account In doing this Finseth fuses a cultural history of the period with fresh readings of such major figures as Ralph Waldo Emerson Harriet Beecher Stowe and Frederick Douglass Drawing on a range of theoretical and disciplinary perspectives including aesthetics anthropology phenomenology and ecocriticism Shades of Green demonstrates the agility with which human thought about the natural and the racial leapt across formal epistemological professional and artistic boundaries In this innovative account the politics of race and slavery are shown to have been deeply intertwined with putatively apolitical cultural understandings of the natural world The book will be of value to scholars in a variety of disciplines including American studies African American literary history and environmental philosophy
