CHAPTER II WHEN in 1916 theMacmillan Company published his collected lyrics Neihardt had become so conscious that the poems constituted a sequence and were directed to a special purpose that he determined to call the volume The Quest This title is an assertion that the arrangement of the poems is not accidental that they are directed to the production of one great mood the feeling of a search for the meaning of life In a sense the volume is as one of its critics has said an epic of the individual soul The sense of search may be found in the first poem Lines in Late March The youth as he had done in boyhood is whistling but for the first time he is self conscious concerning his expression of joy in mere physical existence I whistle Why not No boy ever asks why he whistles or goes barefooted in the spring It is youth with its yearning that asks that question Then in the next poem we have the first wonder that comes with the consciousness of power over woman Here is a new mystery The youth is amazed overwhelmed by the discovery He is a witless musician she his violin How complex how delicate how divine this human violin How exalted the musician whose power is first realized And yet I only feel that song which I have awak ened mysteriously Here we have what we always find in Neihardt a feeling for that which is beyond analysis the elusive that part of life that flows all around us and through and beyond ever escaping the effort to grasp and hold it Masters of language are those who most feel its inadequacy to express the deepest emotions Sometimes they find the new word but even then full expression is not attained Emotion ever runs beyond the limits of words I would I knew some slow soft Laureate Address of John G.Neihardt, Upon Official Notification of His Choice as Poet Laureate of Ne John
