

Labour Absorption and Technical Efficiency in Agriculture: Some Evidences

Dr. Giribabu. M*

Abstract

These days labour is not only the one of the factors of production, it is input for minimizing the cost, increasing productivity and a tool for employment generation and ultimately the reduction of poverty. So the study of labour absorption and technical efficiency in agricultural sector has become pertinent. It is also notable that in agricultural sector underemployment of labour is prevailing that attracted the debate and discussion among agricultural scientists and economists. In this paper an attempt has been made to estimate the labour demand and technological changes for four different crops namely paddy, sugarcane, groundnut and cashew nut in Andhra Pradesh. An extensive farm level data used in this study show that marginal and small farmers absorbed more labour than medium and large farmers. As far as technological impact was concerned it was high in paddy and sugar cane than ground nut and cashew nut. The study has estimated the technical efficiency level of each crop by employing Ordinary Least Square (OLS) and Maximum Likelihood Estimate (MLE) of Trans-log Stochastic Frontier Production. The result of the study indicates that capital intensive technology is high and statistically significant in wet crops than that of Dry crops. On the contrary to that the labour utilization was more in dry crops of groundnut and cashew nut. On labour absorption, the study found that in cashew nut it was 93.5 per cent of labour using higher than sugarcane crop and it was also found that between the subsistence crops, the dry crop of groundnut using about 96% percent higher labour than paddy crop. Similarly, the labour absorption among the gender distribution, male labourers are more predominant in cashew nut and sugarcane crops than their female counterparts in which they are imperative in groundnut and paddy crops in the study villages.

Introduction

Labour is an important input entering the production process and hence the pattern and intensify of its use has generated a lot of interest not only from the viewpoint of cost minimization but also from the viewpoint of increasing productivity and employment. The employment strategies for the rural areas in particular underlie the hypothesis that the generation of employment would lead to a reduction in the poverty as the wage bill would provide the purchasing power to those who need at the most (Ninon. K.N. 1984). However, these strategies could not make any significant dent on the twin problems of poverty and unemployment. But the areas are characterized by low wage rate caused by Sundrum, 1985 Labour Absorption in Agriculture Anne Booth, 1980 Migration, Mechanization, And Agricultural Labor Markets In Egypt Alan Richards, 2019-03-13 After a long period of stability Egypt's agricultural sector experienced sudden change due to the 1973 oil price increases and Anwar Sadat's Open Door economic policies. Workers left rural Egypt for the cities and high wage jobs in the oil exporting countries. The resulting labor shortage and rising real wages in agriculture coincided with a The Biodemography of Subsistence Farming James W. Improved practices must be technically, economically and socially suitable to farmer conditions. The rainfed areas of West Asia and North Africa have highly variable environmental conditions as well as complex social and economic structures. In recent years the region has been experiencing major changes in the relative availabilities and costs of the classical factors of production: land, labor and capital. These changes have important implications for the design of new agricultural technology. On the one hand the availability of labor may be an important factor determining the acceptability of new technology. On the other it is important to consider the impact that technology can have on rural employment. To develop a better awareness of these issues and their relevance to technology development ICARDA initiated a project on Agricultural Labor and Technological Change. The first stage of the project is published here: it is a review of available literature on selected issues of regional importance combined with more detailed analyses of the situations of eight countries with important rainfed agricultural sectors.
