

Critical Care 2 Study Guide

Chest Trauma (10 Q's)

- Miscellaneous

- What is the difference between a blunt and penetrating chest injury?

- How are rib fractures treated and what should you teach them to do to help?

- There is no rib cast, they heal on their own- no strapping or binding the chest. You should take full breaths, cough, and deep breathe to prevent pneumonia and atelectasis. splinting with a pillow will help. Use an Incentive Spirometer to expand the lungs and help remove its secretions. Use NSAIDS and opioids for pain.

- What is Flail Chest?

- Multiple rib fractures cause instability of the chest wall.

- What are some symptoms of flail chest?

- Chest wall moving inward when you breathe in and moving outward when you breathe out. Also, shallow rapid breaths because it hurts to breathe deep as with any rib fracture which can lead to tachycardia and hypoxia and decreased breath sounds.

- How do you treat flail chest and what should you teach?

- High fowlers so it's easier to breathe, possible chest tubes, and possible intubation and mechanical ventilation with PEEP. Teach bedrest with limited activity, and to put a pillow up to area when you breathe because it might make it easier.

- Pneumothorax

- What is a Pneumothorax?

- Air entering the pleural cavity, i.e., around, outside the lung.

- What are some symptoms of a Pneumothorax?

- Tachycardia and dyspnea, chest pain, absent breath sounds over the affected area, or O2 sat drops.

- What is the difference between a Spontaneous and Iatrogenic Pneumothorax?

- A Spontaneous pneumothorax is air around the lung spontaneously, without a known cause- chest trauma or lung disease didn't seem to precede it. Iatrogenic pneumothorax is caused by medical procedures.

- What is the difference between a Traumatic Penetrating Pneumothorax and a Traumatic Blunt Pneumothorax and what would you do for the each?

- A Penetrating Pneumothorax is opened, so you would have a sucking chest wound, and would want to apply dressing on 3 sides without removing the object. A blunt pneumothorax is closed, the air got in the lung space without something stabbing it, if it doesn't go down on its own, needle aspiration or a chest tube is prescribed.

- What is a Tension Pneumothorax?

- When the air in the pleural space cause pressure on the lungs and heart.

- What are the differences in symptoms of a Tension Pneumothorax and the others?
