

Structured vs. Unstructured Interviews

CONSISTENT

STRUCTURED

Structured interviews consist of a pre-defined set of questions that are prepared in advance and asked of every candidate.

When are structured interviews best?

- You have a well-defined job description and know exactly what skills and competencies are needed on the job
- You need to fill the role quickly and want to eliminate bias
- You need objective data to use to make fair hiring decisions

UNSTRUCTURED

Unstructured interviews are more casual. The interviewer asks more open-ended, free-flowing questions.

When are unstructured interviews best?

- The role you're hiring for isn't well defined and you're open to hiring candidates with unique skills
- You know how to control hiring bias without structured interview tactics
- You're using skills assessments to predict job performance and unstructured interviews to assess interpersonal skills
