George And The Angels:

George and the Angels Glenn Eric Meganck, 2011-06-01 Businessman George Richards lives in a gray world The walls he hides behind in his office are gray The carpeting is gray His life is gray But George hears angels angels who call to him sing to him Angels who beg him to come to them to help them George s wife Elaine believes that George is suffering a nervous breakdown and he is committed to a mental institution When he is allowed to return home George falls back into his old life his old habits And the voices return too This time George is unable to resist their call On this irresistible night the voices call George to the sea He follows and climbs aboard a small boat which he rows out to the middle of the ocean The angels tell George to jump And he does George and the Angels is the story of a solitary man caught in an existence without apparent meaning who is suddenly thrust into a world of inexplicable events and inescapable dangers It is the story of a man coming to grips with his own identity and place in this universe George and the Angels challenges our concepts of what is real and what is not and what one man can do to shape his destiny The English Theological Works of George Bull George Bull, 1844 Most of Bull s works were in Latin and were published in a multi volume work shortly before his death This is a reprint by Parker of Vol 1 which was the English texts together with the Vindication The Works of George Bull, D.D., Lord Bishop of St. David's George Bull, 1846
