

THE AUTHOR AND ANOTHER FISHERMAN

WIN BROOKS, author of THE SHINING TIDES, is a contradiction of the old saying, "You must eat, never two masters." He is fully capable of serving himself, his newspaper career, his fiction and his fishing.

His career as a working newspaperman has been highly successful and often exciting. Having started as a copy boy on a Boston newspaper, he became a reporter of sports and straight news, then city editor, then managing editor, the position he now holds.

As a writer he has a long record of popular success in the short story field and he has contributed to such national magazines as Collier's and The Saturday Evening Post.

In his fishing, this is a master which Win Brooks has served with devotion since he began. He was born in Somerville, Massachusetts and spent all his early summers on Cape Cod. He has caught most of the game fish available between Nauset and Key West but somehow always gets back to the Cape and to striped bass.

Mr. Brooks now lives in Marshfield, Massachusetts, a town near the mouth of the North River. He is married and has four daughters and one son, the fishermen pictured with the author above.
