THE STATE Supreme Court of Massachusetts yesterday upheld the decision of the lower court and reinstated an injunction against construction of a reservoir to be located a few miles west of Arkham. Judge Harris, presiding over the court, announced the 4-3 decision.

The injunction was first filed last August by Robert Angley of the University Botany Dept. Professor Angley claims that several species of rare wildflowers exist in the area to be flooded and that these rare species cannot be found anywhere else. Commonwealth engineering officials termed the injunction meaningless, pointing out that only surveys and planning are scheduled to be performed before August of next year and that the present injunction lasts only until next July.

Mysterious Fire Destroys Haunted House

To the dismay of paranormal investigators everywhere, a building known for its phantom residents, disembodied voices, and a cache of bones in the basement was lost to a fire on Monday night, and investigators are worried that the blaze might not have been an accident.

After 153 years, the historic Emmitt House in Martin's Beach met its end in a blaze that took fire-fighters over six hours to quell. The house had most recently gained popularity as a haunted hotspot after the building's workers began reporting some very strange things... including the ghost of the man who built the home.

In the summer of 1925, local ghost hunters performing an investigation of the anomalous activity stumbled upon a cache of bones in the basement, turning the spooky building into a police investigation and drawing the attention of Kingsport's Haunted Collector, who featured the Emmitt House on their series last year. Despite the regular efforts of investigators to quell the hauntings that plagued the home, the spooky activities only continued.

Now police are working on an investigation of their own... what, or who, started the mysterious blaze?

Alijah and Ward, or Two Peas in a Theological Pod, a farce in three acts written by Miskatonic University senior August Delworth, will be presented this Winter by the University Players.

Mrs. Alice Turner, director of the student theater group, announced the production of the play last week. Based on genuine historical event, the story concerns the activities of a Rev. Ward Phillips who, near the turn of the nineteenth century, instigated a witch hunt that threatened to split the town in half.

At odds with Phillips was one Alijah Billington, accused by Phillips of 'making deals with the devil'. Billington, although quite innocent of the charges, was nonetheless adamant regarding what he called 'the snooping about by Phillips and his cronies'. Later Phillips repented and attempted to destroy all copies of his book 'Thaumaturgical Prodigies in the New England Canaan,
