Electronic Learning From Audiotape To Videodisc:

Electronic Learning Jerome Johnston, 1987 This volume does for the learning potential of electronic media in the 1990s what Chu and Schramm's Learning from Television What the Research Says did for educational television in the 1960s. It provides a summary and integration of previous research and acts as a blueprint for future research into educational technology. Questions such as what medium learners prefer, which instructional strategies work best in each medium, and how important is programming are answered for each potentially educational new medium. Adult Literacy and New Technologies, 1994 Technology offers a promising alternative to the labor intensive tutorial based teaching that makes up the bulk of today's literacy training. This technology which includes multimedia speech video and graphics and telecommunications offers new hope to those who have failed in paper pencil educational activities. The report estimates that at least 35 million adults have difficulties with common literacy skills. Over 80 charts, tables and photos. Glossary.

Information Technology Integration for Socio-Economic Development Tossy, Titus, 2016-07-22 As the developed world continues to become more digitized, lesser developed areas are starting to see more technological advancements being integrated into their society. These advancements are creating opportunities to improve both the economy and the lives of people within these areas. Information Technology Integration for Socio Economic Development features theoretical concepts and best practices in the implementation of new technologies within developing areas around the world. Highlighting empirical research on the application of information technologies to bridge the digital divide within different countries, the book is ideally suited for technology developers, managers and policy makers.
