

TEACHING READING

I. INTRODUCTION

Reading is one of the four language skills. It is a receptive skill which involves responding to texts, rather than producing it. Very simply, we can say that reading involves making sense of text. To do this, we need to understand the language of text at word level, sentence level and whole-text level. We also need to connect the message of the text to our knowledge of the world. In short, reading means “reading and understanding”.

II. WHAT DO PEOPLE READ AND WHY DO THEY READ?

I. What do we read?

There are two different kinds of reading - extensive and intensive reading.

The term extensive reading refers to reading which students do often (but not exclusively) away from the classroom. They may read novels, web pages, newspapers, magazines or any other reference material. Where possible, extensive reading should involve reading for pleasure – what Richard Day calls joyful reading. This is enhanced if students have a chance to choose what they want to read, if they are encouraged to read by the teacher, and if some opportunity is given for them to share their reading experiences. Although not all students are equally keen on this kind of reading, we can say with certainty that the ones who read most progress fastest.

The term intensive reading, on the other hand, refers to the detailed focus on the construction of reading texts which takes place usually (but not always) in classrooms. Teachers may ask students to look at extracts from magazines, poems, Internet websites, novels, newspapers, plays and a wide range of other text genres (that is, styles or types of text, see page 113). The exact choice of genres and topics may be determined by the specific purposes that students are studying for (such as business, science or nursing). In such cases, we may well want to concentrate on texts within their specialities. But if, as is often the case, they are a mixed group with differing interests and careers, a more varied diet is appropriate, as the reading sequences in this chapter will demonstrate.

Intensive reading is usually accompanied by study activities. We may ask students to work out what kind of text they are reading, tease out details of meaning, look at particular uses
