Human Engineering And Stereoscopic Viewing Devices:

Human Engineering in Stereoscopic Viewing Devices Daniel B. Diner, Derek H. Fender, 2013-11-11 This book gathers together information concerning the interaction of human stereopsis with various stereoscopic viewing devices especially those used in teleoperator systems The book is not concerned with machine vision systems In these systems data analogous to human binocular visual information is gathered and analyzed by some device for use in decision making or control often without the intervention of a human This subject presents problems of considerable complexity it has generated many ingenious solutions and has been the inspiration of much work of fundamental importance But the problems are quite different from those encountered in the design of systems intended to exploit human stereopsis and there is surprisingly little cross fertilization between the two fields

1 SCOPE AND STRUCTURE OF THIS BOOK The book surveys the known properties of the human unaided binocular system and where possible gives the magnitude of parameters that are of use in designing technical systems involving a human operator Chapter 2 summarizes the human stereoscopic vision literature including the depth distortions of unaided stereoscopic viewing Chapter 3 describes a variety of 3 D image viewing techniques and deals with the performance limits of human stereopsis assisted by simple stereoscopic viewing devices Chapter 4 extends this treatment to television binocular viewing devices and shows

1 2 Chapter 1 that the nature of the depth distortion is changed Chapter 5 analyzes the geometry of single camera stereoscopic systems and discusses the advantages and disadvantages of such systems

Rogers, 2012-01-27 The three volume work Perceiving in Depth is a sequel to Binocular Vision and Stereopsis and to Seeing in Depth both by Ian P Howard and Brian J Rogers This work is much broader in scope than the previous books and includes mechanisms of depth perception by all senses including aural electrosensory organs and the somatosensory system Volume 1 reviews sensory coding psychophysical and analytic procedures and basic visual mechanisms Volume 2 reviews stereoscopic vision Volume 3 reviews all mechanisms of depth perception other than stereoscopic vision The three volumes are extensively illustrated and referenced and provide the most detailed review of all aspects of perceiving the three dimensional world Volume 2 addresses stereoscopic vision in cats and primates including humans It begins with an account of the physiology of stereoscopic mechanisms It then deals with binocular rivalry binocular summation binocular masking and the interocular transfer of visual effects such as the motion aftereffect and visual learning The geometry of the region in binocular space that creates fused images the horopter is discussed in some detail Objects outside the horopter produce images with binocular disparities that are used for stereoscopic vision Two chapters provide accounts of mechanisms that bring the images into binocular register and of stimulus tokens that are used to detect binocular disparities Another chapter discusses cyclopean effects such as cyclopean illusions cyclopean motion and binocular direction that are seen only with binocular vision Stereoacuity is the smallest depth interval that can be detected Methods of measuring stereoacuity and factors that influence it are discussed Two chapters deal with the various types of binocular disparity and the role of each type in stereoscopic vision Another chapter deals with visual effects such as figure perception motion perception and whiteness perception that are affected by the relative distances of stimuli The spatiotemporal aspects of stereoscopic vision including the Pulfrich stereomotion effect are reviewed The volume ends with an account of techniques used to create stereoscopic displays and of the applications of stereoscopy
