Learning Matters Wendy Leeds-Hurwitz, Peter Sloat Hoff, 2012 Higher education in the United States of America, considered by many to set a worldwide standard for broad access and high levels of excellence, has for many decades seen massive changes in its approaches to teaching and learning Redesigning and transforming the way colleges and universities teach their students has been likened to reconstructing an airplane while it remains aloft More than 4,000 US colleges and universities have met the challenge by analyzing major changes in student populations and introducing new instructional techniques that recognize the primacy of learning over teaching This seemingly innocent but powerful transformation acknowledges that teaching only matters as a means to the real end: learning is powering a pedagogical revolution The Learning Revolution in US higher education began when World War II veterans flooded university classrooms soon to be followed by their children, the American Baby Boom Overwhelming numbers of new students from new kinds of backgrounds flooded colleges and universities, forcing professors to rethink how they went about teaching these new generations To handle the numbers, many new universities were created and many established centers for teaching excellence to help professors adapt to new populations with new techniques In the 1990s, higher education further professionalized the teaching craft via the Scholarship of Teaching and Learning Research into how students learn and how to help them learn took its place alongside traditional academic research Aided by a wave of new technologies, teaching centers and the scholarship of teaching and learning are transforming the university classroom as well as many new venues outside the classroom where learning now takes place The resulting new pedagogical architecture now embraces every dimension of US higher education
