

UNIT 1: Introduction to Sociology

CHAPTER 2: How Do We Learn About Society?

- What are Research Methods?
  - Research Methods are the scientific procedures that sociologists use to conduct research and develop knowledge about a particular topic
  - Sociology uses the Scientific Method
- Objectivity
  - The first concept sociologist must take into consideration is objectivity
    - Objectivity is the ability to conduct research without allowing personal biases or prejudices to influence you
      - One must put one's own preconceptions and personal biases and prejudices aside
      - According to Weber, you need verstehen: to understand the meaning or actions from the actor's point of view
- Variables
  - Independent Variables are variables that are deliberately manipulated in an experiment
  - Dependent Variables are the response to the manipulated variable, also known as the outcome
  - Control Variables are variables that are kept constant to accurately test the impact of an independent variable
- Concepts and Operationalizing Variables
  - How should one measure these variables?
  - Concepts are abstract ideas that are important to measure
  - Operationalizing means turning abstract ideas into something measurable
- Cause and Correlation
  - Causal Relationship is a relationship in which one condition leads to a certain consequence
  - Causation is the relationship between cause and effect
    - EX: Why did my pencil fall to the ground?
  - Correlation is an indication that one factor might be the cause for another factor
    - Positive Correlation includes two variables the move in parallel direction
    - Negative Correlation occurs when variables move in opposite directions
    - Spurious Correlation occurs when two variables appear to be related but actually have a different cause
- The Six Steps to the Scientific Method
  - STEP 1: Decide on a Topic
    - The first stage of the research model involves determining what you want to study
    - Sociologists select topics on the basis of importance, personal interest or the availability of research
