Historical Guide Explaining The Typical Representa:

Teaching History for the Common Good Keith C. Barton, Linda S. Levstik, 2004-07-13 In Teaching History for the Common Good Barton and Levstik present a clear overview of competing ideas among educators, historians, politicians, and the public about the nature and purpose of teaching history and they evaluate these debates in light of current research on students' historical thinking. In many cases, disagreements about what should be taught to the nation's children and how it should be presented reflect fundamental differences that will not easily be resolved. A central premise of this book, though, is that systematic theory and research can play an important role in such debates by providing evidence of how students think, how their ideas interact with the information they encounter both in school and out, and how these ideas differ across contexts. Such evidence is needed as an alternative to the untested assumptions that plague so many discussions of history education. The authors review research on students' historical thinking and set it in the theoretical context of mediated action, an approach that calls attention to the concrete actions that people undertake, the human agents responsible for such actions, the cultural tools that aid and constrain them, their purposes, and their social contexts. They explain how this theory allows educators to address the breadth of practices, settings, purposes, and tools that influence students' developing understanding of the past as well as how it provides an alternative to the academic discipline of history as a way of making decisions about teaching and learning the subject in schools. Beyond simply describing the factors that influence students' thinking, Barton and Levstik evaluate their implications for historical understanding and civic engagement. They base these evaluations not on the disciplinary study of history but on the purpose of social education: preparing students for participation in a pluralist democracy. Their ultimate concern is how history can help citizens engage in collaboration toward the common good. In Teaching History for the Common Good, Barton and Levstik discuss the contribution of theory and research, explain the theory of mediated action and how it guides their analysis, and describe research on children's and adults' knowledge of and interest in history. They lay out a vision of pluralist participatory democracy and its relationship to the humanistic study of history as a basis for evaluating the perspectives on the past that influence students' learning. They explore four principal stances toward history: identification, analysis, moral response, and exhibition. They review research on the extent to which children and adolescents understand and accept each of these and examine how the stances might contribute to or detract from participation in a pluralist democracy. They address six of the principal tools of history: narrative structure, stories of individual achievement and motivation, national narratives, inquiry, empathy as perspective taking, and empathy as caring. They review research and conventional wisdom on teachers' knowledge and practice and argue that for teachers to embrace investigative, multi-perspectival approaches to history, they need more than knowledge of content and pedagogy; they need a guiding purpose that can be fulfilled only by these approaches. Preparation for participatory democracy provides such purpose. Teaching History for the Common Good is essential reading for history and social studies professionals, researchers, teacher educators, and students as well as for policymakers parents and members of the general public who are interested in history education or in students thinking and learning about the subject

Meaning, Truth, and Reference in Historical Representation Frank R. Ankersmit, 2012-04-24 In this book the noted intellectual historian Frank Ankersmit provides a systematic account of the problems of reference truth and meaning in historical writing He works from the conviction that the historicist account of historical writing associated primarily with Leopold von Ranke and Wilhelm von Humboldt is essentially correct but that its original idealist and romanticist idiom needs to be translated into more modern terms Rehabilitating historicism for the contemporary philosophy of history he argues reveals the basic truths about the nature of the past itself how we relate to it and how we make sense of the past in historical writing At the heart of Ankersmit's project is a sharp distinction between interpretation and representation The historical text he holds is first and foremost a representation of some part of the past not an interpretation The book's central chapters address the concept of historical representation from the perspectives of reference truth and meaning Ankersmit then goes on to discuss the possible role of experience in the history writing which leads directly to a consideration of subjectivity and ethics in the historian's practice Ankersmit concludes with a chapter on political history which he maintains is the basis and condition of all other variants of historical writing Ankersmit's rehabilitation of historicism is a powerfully original and provocative contribution to the debate about the nature of historical writing

Representations of Immigrants in Museums Yannik Porsché, 2018-02-13 This book offers an interactionist perspective on theories of public representation knowledge and immigration in museum institutions Examining how a Franco German museum exhibition represents immigrants and exposes public stereotypes the analysis follows the process of the production and reception of the exhibition as it travelled from Paris to Berlin The author proposes a microsociological contextualisation analysis integrating discourse analysis and ethnography to compare formats of museum work social interaction in the exhibition and mass media debates Visitor reception of the different exhibition versions reveals the symbolic nature of interactions in museums for example concerning conflicting political voices and accusations of censorship Depending on the institutional context interactions in the museums are geared towards securing immigrants a place in national collective
