Erwing,1889 A Flat Iron for a Farthing by Ewing Juliana Horatia Gatty Ewing,2009-03-03 A Flat Iron for a Farthing Juliana Horatia Juliana Horatia Gatty Ewing,2013-07-19 When the children clamour for a story my wife says to me Tell them how you bought a flat iron for a farthing Which I very gladly do for three reasons In the first place it is about myself and so I take an interest in it Secondly it is about some one very dear to me as will appear hereafter Thirdly it is the only original story in my somewhat limited collection and I am naturally rather proud of the favour with which it is invariably received I think it was the foolish fancy of my dear wife and children combined that this most veracious history should be committed to paper It was either because being so unused to authorship I had no notion of composition and was troubled by a tyro tendency to stray from my subject or because the part played by the flat iron though important was small or because I and my affairs were most chiefly interesting to myself as writer and my family as readers or from a combination of all these reasons together that my tale outgrew its first title and we had to add a second and call it Some Passages in the Life of an only Son 2 Yes I was an only son I was an only child also speaking as the world speaks and not as Wordsworth s simple child spoke But let me rather use the little maid s reckoning and say that I have rather than that I had a sister Her grave is green it may be seen She peeped into the world and we called her Alice then she went away again and took my mother with her It was my first great bitter grief I remember well the day when I was led with much mysterious solemnity to see my new sister She was then a week old
