

1950 You're in the Army now

Reporting to Oswestry in Shropshire, I was given the rather grand title of "Gunner" in the Royal Artillery and spent the next two weeks marching up and down all day, and polishing boots and brasses all night with what seemed like two hours sleep in between. I would be reminded, many times, over the next few weeks that Gunners were the lowest form of life on the planet.

After this two-week initiation, we were posted to Kimmel Park Camp, near Rhyd, in North Wales for seven weeks training - or so we thought - but when we arrived we were told that as the Korean War was on we would be doing an extra seven weeks intensive training before being shipped out to Korea. Now this came as a bit of a shock. I hadn't a clue where Korea was and was fairly certain that there would not be much cycling there so I shouted "HELP", once more. Harry heard this shout for help and assured me things would be alright, so I settled down to fourteen weeks of training.

We were all asked what trade we would prefer to follow and I put down for driver. I was nearly twenty one years old and the only thing I had driven was a tractor way back on the farm, but I got the job and for the first two weeks drove a three-ton truck, followed by a Quad, which was a strange looking four wheel drive vehicle which towed an ammunition trailer, called a gun limber, with a twenty-five-pounder artillery gun behind that.

We went on manoeuvres on the army ranges near Tonfanau and also the Brecon Beacons, often sleeping rough and washing in streams, which was great fun and reminded me of those early holidays at Blaen-Y-Cwm and days cycling round Wales, when it always seemed to rain.

After a few weeks I passed my test and I was given a forty-eight hour pass, just enough time for a quick visit home. I decided I would take my cycle back to camp, in the hope I might get at least a few hours a week for training. I asked for an interview with my Battery Captain to see if he could help, but he was most unhelpful. He was National Service, just like us, but by signing on for an extra year had got his commission. He always looked as if he had a nasty smell under his nose when having to deal with us. The regular Sergeants and N.C.O.s couldn't stand him as he, like us, was still wet behind the ears, but was still their superior.

A few weeks after this interview we were doing marching drill, when, as often happened, this sad excuse for an officer criticized our performance and announced that as we weren't fit enough to march properly he would lead us on a five mile run the following day, and he would show us what being fit was and that he would see how long any of us could keep up with him. All of this was said with great sarcasm. One or two of the squad were unfit, but you get that in any squad so to group us altogether was not on and it really brassed us off. We all got the impression that he thought himself a good runner.

One of our mob was an amateur boxer and did a lot of road running for training. His name was "Taff" Hughes, and he and I had often talked about our respective sports and he knew that I had done some running in the past.
