Historic Photographic Processes: A Guide to Creating Handmade Photographic Images Richard

Farber,1998-10-01 Historic Photographic Processes is a comprehensive user's guide to the historical processes that have become popular alternatives to modern and digital technology. Though many of the techniques, applications, and equipment were first developed in the nineteenth century, these same methods can be used today to create hand-crafted images that are more attractive and permanent than conventional prints or digital outputs. Fine art photographer Richard Farber incorporates extensive research with clearly written directions and resource lists to provide in-depth information on eight of the most enduring processes in photographic history, including salted paper, albumen, cyanotype, kallitype, platinum, palladium, carbon, carbonyl, gum, bichromate, and bromoil. He guides the reader through each step, from selecting the appropriate paper and sensitizing it to exposing, developing, and toning the final print. Each method is accompanied by a short explanation of how it was originally used and its significance in the evolution of photography. Historic Photographic Processes contains more than fifty color and ten black and white images that beautifully illustrate each of the processes described. Chapters include an introduction to photographic techniques and applications, such as useful safelights, sizing paper, measuring solutions, exposure controls, ultraviolet light sources, and making enlarged negatives, as well as an extensive section on safety in and outside of the darkroom. The appendix provides important information on the chemicals discussed, as well as health and safety references, supply sources in the United States, Canada, and Europe, and a complete catalog of Internet resources. The Art of Photography G. C. Hermann Halleur,2015-07-06 Excerpt from The Art of Photography Instructions in the Art of Producing Photographic Pictures in Any Color and on Any Material I have been engaged for several years in experiments and researches on the chemical alterations and modifications produced in various bodies by the action of light The object which I had more immediately in view was to ascertain whether other metallic compounds besides those of silver might be used in photography In addition to this I had also proposed to myself to try whether the purely conjectural and random way of mixing together the salts used in photographic processes might not be reduced to something like a law of definite mixing proportions It affords me sincere gratification to be able to state that I have attained both objects The results of the experiments which I made to ascertain whether other metals besides silver might not be employed in photography fully established the fact that all metallic compounds suffer alteration under the influence of light In many of them this alteration takes place in a very short time as in the case of iron for instance others require a more protracted exposure to the action of the light By combinations of different metallic salts the most interesting variations may be produced Next to silver the salts of iron and the compounds of chromium appear to me the most important Thus for instance the blue or green images produced with a salt of iron and ferricyanide of potassium commonly termed red prussiate of potash or potassa look remarkably fine and are well adapted for light screens and lithophanies to protect them effectually from injury they need simply be enclosed between two glass plates set in a frame About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any
