Exercises In Physical Geography:

Geography 203 Planet Earth Exercises in Physical Geography Charles W. Lafon, 2016-08-22 Physical geography is among the grandest scientific disciplines. It is the science of the earth's surface and its subjects are the features that inspire us, provide sustenance for us, and sometimes threaten us. These features include everything from mountains to rivers, ocean currents to storm tracks, and prairies to rainforests. In studying physical geography, we gain a systematic understanding of why these features exist and how they interact with human populations. This understanding is critical if people are to manage environmental problems and sustain our economic well-being. The group of exercises included in this publication has been created to help students understand essential topics in physical geography. These exercises augment the textbook and lecture material. No single exposure to a topic is sufficient for learning it; rather, it is through repeatedly grappling with a topic that we can truly begin to comprehend it. Laboratory and Field Exercises in Physical Geography Gilbert Haven Trafton, 1905

Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1908 edition. Excerpt: EXERCISE V THE SCULPTURE OF MOUNTAINS. Object To explain various features of mountain ranges. Preliminary 1 1 1 gives a general view over a rolling district of low hills and shallow valleys all covered with a deep weathered soil. The district is drained by a large river and many smaller streams all flowing quietly and smoothly through their flood plains. The soils vary from place to place as if the underlying rocks were of different kinds. Some low mountains rise in the E and NW there the soil is thinner and more stony. The view is cut off in front by a vertical section the baseline of which is at sea level. Altitudes are marked at various points a scale of altitudes is drawn near the NE corner and a scale of miles along the front baseline. This exercise uses 11 12 14 13 16 1 22 also 37 1 5. Note that Plate 14 is to be used before Plate 13 1 1. The distance along the winding river A to E 111 being 30 mi what is the average fall of the river in feet per mile? 2 If E is 600 mi from the river mouth what is the average fall from E to the sea? 3 What is about the width of the main river flood plain? 4 The altitudes on stream or small river F SE corner of 111 are indicated for points two miles apart. What is its average fall the width of its flood plain? 5 Why may the streams of this district be described as thoroughly graded with respect to their general baselevel the ocean? 6 What is the general altitude of the interfluvies or spaces between the small rivers see foreground profile their relief? 7 What is the altitude of the highest mountain on the N border the general relief in that mountain group. Note To find roughly the height of the mountain above the surrounding district draw a straight Field and
