

Pragmatics vs. Interlanguage Pragmatics (ILP)

“Pragmatics is the study of language from the point of view of users, especially of the choices they make, the constraints they encounter in using language in social interaction and the effects their use of language has on other participants in the act of communication” (Crystal, 1997)

“ILP is a domain within second language studies which focuses on L2 pragmatic development (how L2 learners develop the ability to understand and perform action in TL)” ” (Crystal, 1997)

Foreign Language Learning, Teaching and Testing Eva Alcón Soler, Alicia Martínez Flor, 2008 The book focuses on investigating pragmatic learning teaching and testing in foreign language contexts The volume brings together research that investigates these three areas in different formal language learning settings and focuses on different foreign languages The book should be of interest to graduate students and researchers working in the area of second language acquisition

Learning to Request in a Second Language Machiko Achiba, 2003-02-07 This book examines the acquisition of requests in English by a seven year old Japanese girl during her 17 month residence in Australia The study focuses on the linguistic repertoire available to the child as she attempts to make requests and vary these to suit different goals and addressees This book helps unravel features of pragmatic development in the child's interlanguage a subject about which we yet know very little Interlanguage Pragmatics: A Study of Moroccan EFL Learners' Requests Ayoub Loutfi, 2015-04-29

The ultimate goal of this study is to investigate the issue of pragmatic transfer from L1 into the interlanguage of Moroccan learners of English namely when these learners make requests in English More specifically this study seeks to compare the average frequencies of direct and indirect strategies used by both native Moroccan English as a foreign language learners and native English speakers Finally this study will further attempt to explore whether transfer decreases as the study level increases namely the case of the Moroccan EFL university learners at the first and the third level of University A number of sixty subjects take part in the present study They are divided into two groups The first group involves the Moroccan learners of English who in turn bifurcated into two groups of academic level Second Year N 20 and Third year N 20 The subjects in the second group are 20 native speakers of English In order to answer the research questions addressed in this study the

Discourse Completion Task DCT is adopted This DCT provides the subjects with a number of seven situations in which different situations are controlled namely social distance power relation and the degree of imposition A Moroccan Arabic DCT is also used in order to examine how Moroccan students perform requests in their mother tongues The results reveal that evidence of pragmatic transfer is found in the requests produced by Moroccan learners of English Thus the first hypothesis is confirmed The second finding is that academic level does not play a major role in pragmatic ability For this fact the second research hypothesis is rejected in favor of the null hypothesis drawing the conclusion that pragmatic transfer is not related to academic level To sum up the whole a number of research and pedagogical implications are suggested
