Abstract

In the 21st century, law enforcement agencies have increasingly realized the importance of police–civilian contacts in shaping public evaluations of legal authorities. Although many studies have revealed the Black–White racial disparities in public perceptions of the police, the impact of the nexus of civilian and officer race and ethnicity has rarely been adequately examined. Drawing upon a nationwide dataset, this study examined the effects of racial and ethnic combinations between the police and civilians on attitudes toward procedural justice and police legitimacy reported by 5,201 civilians who had recent encounters with police officers during traffic or pedestrian stops. The results showed a perception disparity regarding procedural justice and legitimacy among racial/ethnic combinations involving White, Black, and Hispanic civilians and officers. The nexus of Black–civilians–White–officers yielded the most negative effect. Hispanic civilians displayed more positive attitudes toward the police than their White counterparts. Procedural justice mediated the racial/ethnic effect on the perception of police legitimacy. Findings and policy implications are discussed.

Introduction

In the 21st century, law enforcement agencies have increasingly realized the importance of police–civilian contacts in shaping public evaluations of legal authorities. Not surprisingly, community stakeholders expect the police to be fair and sensitive to the needs of people with whom they come into daily contact. To this end, policymakers and police executives have called for research

Ethnicity and Sociopolitical Change in Africa and Other Developing Countries

Santosh C. Saha, 2008-03-07 This edited collection of essays answers a basic question posed by contemporary discourse on state building How might people's identification with a particular ethnic group matter Essays in this book use an integrated multi disciplinary approach to understanding regional and local community culture and socio political development in developing countries especially in Sub Saharan Africa to argue that the state as well as civil society confers on cultural differences a legitimacy that can be achieved in no other way but by positive cooperation Contributors from different countries look at local patterns in state building and modernization as they have unfolded over the course of the last fifty years They claim that the people and ethnic groups in most developing countries adhere to a concept of popular sovereignty that testifies that aspects of positive and moral ethnicity can contribute to social change as in China economic development as in India or in a democratization process as in Rwanda and Burundi The eventual methodological assumption made by these essays presumes that ethnic conflicts in such countries as Cyprus Turkey India and Rwanda have no moral sanction ethnicity has not assumed a political ideology One conclusion reached by the contributors is that some form of accommodation between opposing ethnically diversified groups as well as between state and ethnic elements is feasible

The Ethnic Entanglement Lui Hebron, John F. Stack, 1999-06-30 The ongoing reconstruction of world politics following the collapse of Soviet and Eastern European variants of communism have seemingly unleashed the power of ethnicity with a vengeance Stack Hebron and their contributors explore the concept of ethnicity in international relations seeking to address this most destabilizing yet ubiquitous dimension of the emerging new world order As a central force in international politics ethnicity and ethnonational movements raise two fundamental questions about the nature of power and politics in contemporary international relations First what is the relationship between ethnicity and conflict within across and among states Second what role does ethnicity play in exacerbating conflicts which result in the intervention by external forces both state and nonstate manifested by increasing levels of violence and spillover instability as exemplified by the Middle East the Asian Republics of the former Soviet Union and Yugoslavia This book is designed to provide scholars of international relations with a compelling approach to the study of ethnicity The study of ethnic nationalism is a growing area of scholarly inquiry not fully appreciated Thus this collection is designed to fill a void in the literature and as such will be of interest to students scholars and policy makers involved with issues of ethnicity and world politics

The Geography of Ethnic Violence Monica Duffy Toft, 2010-01-01 The Geography of Ethnic Violence is the first among numerous distinguished books on ethnic violence to clarify the vital role of territory in explaining such conflict Monica Toft introduces and tests a theory of ethnic violence one that provides a compelling general explanation of not only most ethnic violence civil wars and terrorism but many interstate wars as well This understanding can foster new policy initiatives with real potential to make ethnic violence either less likely or less destructive It can also guide policymakers to solutions that endure The book offers a distinctively powerful synthesis of comparative politics and international relations theories as well as a striking blend of statistical and historical case study methodologies By skillfully combining a statistical analysis of a large number of ethnic conflicts with a focused comparison of historical cases of ethnic violence and nonviolence including four major conflicts in the former Soviet Union it achieves a rare balance of general applicability and deep insight Toft concludes that only by understanding how legitimacy and power interact can we hope to learn why some ethnic conflicts turn violent while others do not Concentrated groups defending a self defined homeland often fight to the death while dispersed or urbanized groups almost never risk violence to redress their grievances Clearly written and rigorously documented this book represents a major contribution to an ongoing debate that spans a range of disciplines including international relations comparative politics sociology and history
