HIV Prevention with Drug-Using Populations—Current Status and Future Prospects: Introduction and Overview

Drs. Needle, Coyle, and Normand, Ms. Lambert, and Ms. Cesari are all with the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA). Dr. Needle has been Chief of NIDA's Community Research Branch since 1992. Dr. Coyle is Chief of the Clinical, Epidemiology, and Applied Sciences Review Branch of NIDA's Office of Extramural Program Review. Dr. Normand is a Health Scientist Administrator, Ms. Lambert is a Health Statistician, and Ms. Cesari is a Public Health Advisor, all in NIDA's Community Research Branch.

This special volume of Public Health Reports chronicles the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA) prevention research response to the epidemics of drug abuse, HIV (the human immunodeficiency virus) infection, and AIDS (the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome). In 1985, the Public Health Service (PHS) published a comprehensive plan to control and prevent the spread of HIV and AIDS.¹ A meeting held in 1986 resulted in recommendations on the prevention of HIV transmission in injecting drug users (IDUs). During that same year, Congress and the administration quadrupled NIDA's funding for research on the dual epidemics of drug abuse and drug abuse-related HIV infection and AIDS. In response to the challenges of these twin epidemics, researchers have conducted epidemiological and ethnographic studies to describe and monitor trends in populations at risk for HIV, their risk behaviors, and the contexts or settings within which those risks occur and their impact on HIV infection rates (prevalence and incidence). Researchers also have developed and implemented interventions to change risk behaviors to prevent the spread of HIV infection.

Epidemiological studies have documented that HIV is spread primarily through multiperson reuse (sharing) of contaminated syringes, needles, and other drug injection equipment and by unprotected sexual intercourse with infected individuals.^{2,3} Ethnographic studies of IDUs in HIV and AIDS epicenters indicated that drug users who were knowledgeable about HIV risks associated with injection practices began making changes in their behaviors to reduce their risks for HIV.^{4,5} Though IDUs understood the risk for HIV associated with their injection practices, many continued to engage in high levels of sharing (multiperson reuse of needles and

Network Meeting on HIV Prevention in Drug-Using Populations, 1999 Drug Abuse: Prevention and Treatment Mangai Natarajan, 2017-05-15 Ever since the Shanghai convention in 1909 the threat posed to human well being by drug abuse has led countries around the world to take action to deal with their drug problems There are wide variations in the policies pursued but most countries try to reduce both the supply of and the demand for drugs Unfortunately there is little research consensus on the respective merits of these two approaches or about the best ways to pursue them Consequently control and prevention policies are mostly driven by political considerations economic realities and cultural expectations though research has played an important part in formulating and evaluating treatments for drug addiction This volume reviews studies on drug abuse prevention and treatment strategies under five main areas 1 Reducing supply strategies to control the flow of drugs from production to retail distribution 2 Reducing demand prevention of drug use at all stages of involvement and consumption levels 3 Reducing harm promoting situational risk reduction practices for regular users addicts and recreational users 4 Reducing addiction drug treatment options for various groups in various settings and 5 Drug policies and prescriptions focused on debates about prohibition and legalization Principles of HIV Prevention in Drug-using Populations, 2002
