

This drawing shows how a sacrifice would be carried out. The dead body would then be cut off from the tree and placed respectfully in a bog or grave because at this moment the body belongs to the gods.

This man was found buried in a bog at Grauballe in Denmark. His throat had been cut from ear to ear. Scientists discovered that he had been buried 1650 years ago. His last meal, eaten shortly before his death, had been a vegetable soup made from Spring seeds.

"The German tribes hold trials of accused men before their tribal council. The punishment varies according to the crime. Traitors and deserters are hung from trees. Cowards, poor fighters and evil men are drowned in swamps under a cover of sticks." Roman Historian Tacitus

D: This noose was around the neck of an Iron Age man who was found buried in Borre Fen in Denmark. His last meal had been a soup made from Spring seeds. Across his body was a birch 1m long and 4.5 cm thick. Next to the noose in the picture was a neck ring. The Iron Age people used to bury these in the bogs as offerings to the Spring goddess.

Here is a description of the religious customs of seven north German tribes - the Reudigni, the Aviones, the Varini, the Eudoses, Suarini and the Nultones. These tribes worshipped Mother Earth, the goddess of Spring and growing crops. Each spring they celebrate the birth of new life and crops.

"There is nothing unusual about these tribes except their worship of Mother Earth, the goddess of Spring. They believe that each spring she rides through the tribes. In the middle of a lake is an island with a small wood on it and in the wood is a holy chariot covered with cloth. Only one priest may touch it. This priest follows the goddess as she rides away each spring in her chariot drawn by cows. This is followed by days of fun and merrymaking wherever she goes to stay. All is peaceful and quiet until the goddess grows tired of the company of ordinary men and women and returns to her holy wood. After this the chariot, the robes, and the goddess herself are washed clean in a hidden lake. This task is done by slaves who are then drowned in the lake."
