

A high-angle photograph of the Christ the Redeemer statue in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. The statue is a large, white, Christ-like figure with arms outstretched, standing on a dark, rocky pedestal. It overlooks a dense, sprawling cityscape of Rio de Janeiro, with numerous buildings and streets visible. In the background, there are several large, rounded mountains, some with patches of green vegetation. The sky is a clear, pale blue. The overall scene is a classic view of Rio de Janeiro from the Christ the Redeemer viewpoint.

A History of Brazil , The South American Republics : History of Brazil Thomas C. Dawson,2019-09-17 This book presents the History of Brazil from the discovery to the establishment of the Republic On the 9th of March 1500 Pedro Alvarez Cabral a Portuguese nobleman of illustrious birth but not yet distinguished by any notable feats in war or seamanship sailed from Lisbon for the East Indies This expedition was sent out to continue the work begun by Vasco da Gama in the first all sea voyage to India It was an advance guard for the larger armament that two years later founded the Portuguese empire on the coasts of India Vasco da Gama himself wrote Cabral s sailing orders The latter was instructed after passing the Cape Verde Islands in 14 North to sail directly south as long as the wind was favourable If forced to change his course he was ordered to keep on the starboard tack even though it led him south west When he reached the latitude of the Cape of Good Hope 34 South he was to bear away to the east These sailing instructions have been the subject of much discussion Many believe their sole purpose was to enable Cabral to avoid the Guinea calms so annoying to sailing ships near the African coast Others contend that Da Gama had seen signs of land to the west on his own voyage and that its discovery was a real though secondary object of the expedition In any event the Brazilian coast is too near the natural route around Africa to have escaped encounter and would infallibly have shortly been seen by someone else Forty two days after leaving Lisbon Cabral s fleet saw unmistakable signs of land being then in latitude 17 degrees south and longitude 36 degrees west From the Cape Verde Islands just off the western point of Africa he had made 2300 miles and had come 500 miles to the west The next day a mountain was sighted which he called Paschoal because it was Easter week This mountain is in the southern part of the state of Bahia about four hundred miles north east of Rio and on a coast that to this day is sparsely inhabited and rarely visited The following day the whole fleet came to an anchor a mile and a half from the shore and just north of the dangerous Abrolhos reefs This was the 23rd of April Old Style which corresponds with the 3rd of May in the Gregorian calendar The date is a national holiday in Brazil and the anniversary for the annual convening of Congress Because no quadrupeds or large rivers were seen Cabral thought he had discovered an island and named it the Island of the True Cross The name has not survived except in poetry He stopped ten days on the coast took formal possession and sent expeditions on shore which entered into communication with the Indians who were seen in considerable numbers It is characteristic that the first question asked of the Indians was if they knew what gold and silver were They were peaceable and friendly and the old chronicle describes them as of a dark reddish complexion with good features and muscular well shaped bodies They wore no clothes their lower lips and cheeks were perforated to carry great ornaments of white bone and their hair was elaborately dressed and adorned with feathers These were fair specimens of the Tupi Guaranies the largest of the four great families into which the Brazilian aborigines have been classified The others are the Caribs the Arawaks and the Botacudos There are also traces of tribes who inhabited the country remote centuries ago In caves in Minas Geraes skeletons have been found remarkably like those of the earliest Europeans The theory is that these Indians came from Europe by land in that remote geological epoch when Scandinavia was joined to Greenland Later came Mongoloids probably by way of the Behring Strait who appear largely to have exterminated their European predecessors and to have been the ancestors of the modern Indians A Concise
