

Modern Language Association (MLA) Style Guidelines Overview

Introduction

This poster overviews basic guidelines for using MLA style. To supplement this poster, consult the MLA Handbook (8th ed.; text). The MLA handbooks are available in most writing centers, libraries, and bookstores. The MLA also maintains a website with style information at style.mla.org. You may also reference the Purdue University (OWL) for information on using MLA style: <http://owl.purdue.edu/>.

Formatting

General Essay Format

Type MLA essays on white 8.5 x 11 inch paper. Margins should be 1" on all sides. All text should be double-spaced. Use a legible font (e.g., Times New Roman) in 10 to 12 pt. size. In the upper left-hand corner of the first page, list your name, your instructor's name, the course, and the date.

Readers should contain your last name and page numbers (1, 2, 3, 4) in the upper right-hand corner. 1/2" from the top and right aligned. Double space between the essay's title (not bolded, underlined, etc.) and the first line of the text. Indent the first line of each paragraph 1/2" (five spaces or press tab) from the left margin.

Works Cited Page Format

Begin the Works Cited list on a separate page at the end of your essay. Maintain MLA formatting throughout. Alphabetize the citations by the last name of the first author. Use a hanging indent every line after the first line of a citation is indented 1/2" using tab to a word processor's settings (on each citation). Double space throughout. Do not add extra space between citations.

In-Text Citations

One Author

Use parenthetical citation to cite outside sources in your text. The page number (and/or of your outside source) should always appear in the parenthetical citation. The author's name for the outside source may appear in the sentence itself.

Readers must know that Aristotle's theory was rooted in a "systematic method of power" (Aristotle, 2012).

Alternatively, the author's name can go in the parentheses after the quote. Aristotle's theory is characterized by the "systematic method of power" (Aristotle, 2012).

Multiple Authors

For a source with two authors, list the authors' last names in the text or in the parenthetical citation.

Ben and Kevin argue that one should read a text for what it says on the surface, rather than looking for hidden meaning (2012).

The authors claim that surface reading (what is what is text), perception, apprehension is text" (Ben and Kevin 2012).

For a source with three or more authors, list the first author's last name, and replace the additional names with "et al."

According to Brown et al., "human apprehension of text is the result of a complex process of perception" (2012).

The authors claim that one source of meaning in the text is the result of a complex process of perception (Brown et al., 2012).

No Known Author

For a source with no known author use a shortened title of the resource in the parenthetical citation.

Many global warming forecasts claim to show human behavior will impact the "temperature of the planet" (2012).

Citing Indirect Sources

While it is always best to find the original source, sometimes you may have to use an indirect source (a source cited in another source). For such indirect quotations, use "qtd. in" to indicate the source you actually consulted. For example:

Readers argue that high schools are pressured to act as "social service centers," and may do so in their role" (qtd. in Thomas, 2012).

Internet Sources

For internet sources, include enough information to lead the reader to the appropriate entry on the Works Cited page. Usually this includes the author's name. You do not need a page or paragraph number in the parenthetical citation, however.

According to a 2012 Ball State Journal article, which made up "about 80% of the game playing field in the 10" in 2011, largely due to the explosion of internet gaming in which players' knowledge and knowledge.

Works Cited

Books

MLA style's 8th edition focuses on the principles of source documentation instead of on particular formats for different types of sources. This approach to citation emphasizes the many ways in which writers access information and the many kinds of sources they use.

MLA now bases Works Cited entries on "containers," a concept that allows writers to use a standard form for any kind of source. For example, if you cite an episode in a TV series, the series would be the container for the episode. Similarly, a book is a container for a chapter, a blog is a container for a blog post, and a journal is a container for a scholarly article. Since it is possible to find a copy of a given source in many different places (for instance, you might find an article published in a book, and in a scholarly journal, and on an online database, and each copy might be slightly different), it is important to account for all the containers of the original source you use.

The basic format for an MLA Works Cited entry contains core elements first and additional elements second. The templates are as follows:

Author. Title. Title of container (edition/version of text, other contributors, translators or editors, version info, name info, author(s), publisher, publication date, location (page, paragraph, etc. or URL). List container's title, other contributors, version, date, publisher, publication date, location, date of access (if applicable).

Book

The author's name for a book with a single author appears in "last name, first name" format. For books with multiple authors, editors, or other circumstances, consult the MLA Handbook or the Purdue OWL.

Clark, James. James Henry's New America. Chicago, 1971.

Article in a Scholarly Journal

Use the author and title of the article as you normally would. Then, put the title of the journal in italics. When possible, include the volume number ("vol") and issue number ("no."), separated by commas. Finally, add the year and page numbers.

Smith, Alexander. "Understanding the American: The Role of the American in American History." American History 10. 1. 1999. pp. 41-55.

Internet Sources

MLA encourages the inclusion of date of access information as well as identifiers such as URLs or YouTube or DOI's change over time. If you can provide a stable URL, DOI, or a permanent link, do so.

Author, editor, or compiler name (if available). Name of title. Version, number. Name of institution/organization affiliated with the site (publisher or publisher). Date of resource creation (if available). URL, DOI or permalink. Date of access (if applicable).
