

1. Lexical Diffusion

- What is lexical diffusion?

definition: a sound change begins in a small subset of morphemes (including vocabulary forms). This change is lexically gradual, but phonetically abrupt.

In the change from phoneme X to phoneme Y, certain phonemes undergo the change directly (lexically gradual), but for a time, others will show fluctuation between phonemes X and Y.

e.g., fluctuation between literary and colloquial pronunciations in Chinese e.g., fluctuation between sociolinguistic variables in English bears on the question of how language change is "implemented" or transmitted through the phonology of the language; "wellentheorie"

The "transmission" problem: spread of a change through the speech output and internalized grammar of a native speaker, and through the speech community as a whole.
