What about Dads? Exploring and Evaluating Fathers' Needs and Interests Within a Preschool Program Laura Drew,2022 This thesis project explored parent education topics and involvement opportunities of interest to a group of fathers of young children Eighteen fathers from of a private college based preschool program serving campus and community families with children from age 2 to age 5 participated The goal was to uncover and develop resources for fathers with young children and examine effective strategies for the program to involve fathers Using two exploratory pilot meetings fathers identified several topics of interest and discussed their preferences for involvement in the preschool program For example the topic of greatest interest was how to support children s development of emotional regulation The fathers also expressed interest in involvement opportunities such as ongoing meetings with other fathers parenting meetings for all parents and volunteering in their child s classroom Fathers indicated that they were eager to be involved but need more information and support regarding their options The fathers ideas suggested a multi pronged plan for supporting and engaging fathers Father involvement initiatives include a parenting workshop on supporting children s development of emotional regulation a fatherhood group that meets several times throughout the year a comprehensive survey of all fathers in the program which alerts them to the full range of involvement opportunities and a series of staff training sessions to build the staff's knowledge and skills in father engagement involvement. The thesis project suggests father involvement approaches which can be implemented over the school year. Implications for early childhood programs and potential directions for future research are also discussed. An

Examination of Early Childhood Educators' Use of Program Policies Designed to Encourage Father Involvement

Caroline Sophie Omolo, 2008. This study investigated early childhood educators' use of program policies that are designed to encourage father involvement in two early childhood programs. The study centered on comparing how well lead teachers from two early childhood programs, Head Start and developmental preschool programs, used program policies designed to encourage father involvement. A total of 120 lead teachers, 65 from Head Start programs and 55 from developmental preschool programs, participated in the study. Two measures were used in this study. The program's involvement with fathers was evaluated using the Program Assessment Rating Scale (PAR), a measure of early childhood educators' perceived use of program policies aimed at involving fathers in their programs. The degree of father involvement in the early childhood programs was evaluated using Levine's Assessment of Father Involvement Rating Scale (LAFIR), a measure of early childhood educators' perception of the levels of father involvement in their programs. Frequencies, means, standard deviations, and independent samples t tests for the subscale PAR measure scores were calculated for Head Start and developmental lead teachers. Results indicated that for both educator samples, the participants stated that their programs reflected an adequate level of high commitment to fathers on all but one subscale, the program evaluation subscale. The results of the independent samples t tests reflected that the mean scores of Head Start lead teachers were significantly different from their developmental preschool counterparts on three subscales of the PAR: the outreach and recruitment subscale, parent family education practice subscale, and program evaluation subscale. No significant differences between the two groups were found on the other four subscales: program characteristics subscale, staff attitudes and background subscale, parent-child interaction subscale, and co-parenting and family development subscale. Bivariate analyses revealed that for Head Start lead teachers, positive and significant relationships exist between father involvement and all seven subscales. On the other hand, the results reflect that for developmental preschool lead teachers, positive and significant relationships are also present between father involvement and all except one subscale, the outreach and recruitment subscale. Multiple regression analyses, however, revealed that for the Head Start lead teachers, no partial correlation between any of the seven subscales and the father involvement index was significant at  $p < .05$ . Promising Practices for Partnering with Families in the Early Years. Mary M. Cornish, 2008-08-01. This volume is directed toward research to practice issues related to partnering with families of children birth through age 5. This monograph and the next monograph focus on family and school involvement issues in two age categories. This sixth volume analyzes family involvement practices across a variety of settings and programs at the early childhood level The seventh monograph in this series addresses research and practices related to family school issues in middle and secondary schools The chapters address to varying degrees five themes based on the principles of familycentered partnerships 1 Recognizing and respecting one another s knowledge and expertise 2 Sharing information through two way communication 3 Sharing power and decision making 4 Acknowledging and respecting diversity and 5 Creating networks of support The monograph supports the accomplishment of these goals as a whole by providing important insights about exemplary programs and promising practices informed by current research Also it highlights policies and theoretical perspectives relevant to these aims Individual chapters offer a variety of practical strategies and recommendations that families early childhood practitioners policymakers and researchers can use to enhance their knowledge and strengthen their skills for partnering effectively
