Feasting Naturally With Our Friends:

The Feast of St. Friend Arnold Bennett,1911 Something has happened to Christmas or to our hearts or to both In order to be convinced of this it is only necessary to compare the present with the past In the old days of not so long ago the festival began to excite us in November For weeks the house rustled with charming and thrilling secrets and with the furtive noises of paper parcels being wrapped and unwrapped the house was a whispering gallery The tension of expectancy increased to such a point that there was a positive danger of the cord snapping before it ought to snap On the Eve we went to bed with no hope of settled sleep We knew that we should be wakened and kept awake by the waits singing in the cold and we were glad to be kept awake so On the supreme day we came downstairs hiding delicious yawns and cordially pretending that we had never been more fit The day was different from other days it had a unique romantic quality tonic curative of all ills On that day even the tooth ache vanished retiring far into the wilderness with the spiteful word the venomous thought and the unlovely gesture We sang with gusto Christians awake salute the happy morn The Barmecide's Feast John Gore,1912
