Light and Colour Theories and Their Relation to Light and Colour Standardization (Classic Reprint) Joseph W. Lovibond, 2017-12-22 Excerpt from Light and Colour Theories and Their Relation to Light and Colour Standardization It may at first appear strange that colour one of the most important indices of value in the Arts Manufactures and Natural Products should have no common nomenclature or reliable standard for reference the reproduction of a given colour depending for exactitude on the memory of a sensation whereas this branch of science requires a physical means of recording a colour with a power of recovery It remains to be shown that this power of record and recovery is possible and depends only on the observance of a few simple natural laws easy of application The study of colour is carried on by two principal methods the spectroscopic where the colours are partially separated as a continuous band by a regular variation in their indices of refraction the colours gradually merging into each other by overlapping in opposite directions or by absorption where a colour is developed by absorbing its complementary and is isolated as a single or complex colour This latter is nature's own method About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works Light and Colour, 2004 Light and Color R.
