Armenia: Travels and Studies and the Russian Provinces (Complete) Henry Finnis Blosse

Lynch, 2020-09-28 On four different occasions both in summer and in winter I have sailed along the southern shore of the Black Sea almost from one extremity to the other yet I do not remember having seen the sky free from heavy clouds during two consecutive days As the ship speeds eastwards along the mountains of Bithynia a thin veil of haze will blend the land outlines together while as the range grows in height with every mile of progress the vapour will collect about its upper slopes in long horizontal black banks Even when the sun of this southern climate has swept the sky of every lingering film when the zenith and the water recall the hues of the Mediterranean the whole scale of brilliant blues somewhere upon the wide circle of the horizon will be lurking the scattered forces of the mist But the stronghold of the cloud is in the mountains of Akhaltsykh at the foot of Caucasus in the extreme eastern angle of the sea Can there exist a more gloomy coast There the sky is always lowering above the inky water and the forests of fir which clothe the range from foot to summit wave darkly like feathers over a pall Such I think are the impressions which the mind most closely associates with the aspect of this sea and shore What a contrast to the smiling landscape of the Bosphorus the strait through which we enter this sad sea or leave it on our return home The cold draught follows the home coming ship up the narrow channel between the wooded cliffs and frets the running tide into crisp little waves which sparkle in the brilliant light The dolphins leap from the blue water and dart shining through the air To the traveller who is returning from a long journey in Asia and a tedious tossing on this grey sea the Bosphorus always bright and gay and beautiful may appear as the promised gate of paradise beyond the world of shades The character of the coast cannot fail to be affected by this climate by this atmosphere Just as the vapours gather thickest where the mountains are most lofty at the south eastern angle of the sea so the vegetation increases in luxuriance and variety the further eastwards we proceed on our course The cliffs or rolling hills about the entrance of the Bosphorus the closing cliffs of the Greek legend which caught the tail feathers of the dove soon give place to the belt of wooded mountains which rise from the immediate margin of the water and stretch from west to east along the entire seaboard to the Phasis and

Batum Tier upon tier they rise from the narrow strip of sand and pebbles and grow both in height and in boldness of outline as they stretch towards the east The winds of the open sea the cold winds of Scythia fly over the barrier of the range and the ship may often anchor in smooth water at a point where least protection would appear to be offered by the configuration of the shore But the moisture of the air is arrested at the coast line and hangs about the upper tiers of the mountains or clings to the fir clad slopes These natural conditions are extremely favourable to vegetation and the larger grows the scale upon which they are operating the more abundant becomes the growth of trees and shrubs When at last we have reached the neighbourhood of the Phasis where the wall of this range towers highest above us on the one side and the line of Caucasus closes the horizon on the other the shore becomes clothed with dense forests plants and creepers flourish with tropical exuberance the traveller threading the maze of evergreen woodland might be walking along the banks of the Amazon or through the glades of Mazanderan

Toward Robert Frost Judith Oster, 1994-02-01 Every poem Robert Frost declared is an epitome of the great predicament a figure of the will braving alien entanglements This study considers what Frost meant by those entanglements how he braved them in his poetry and how he invited his readers to do the same In the process it contributes significantly to a new critical awareness of Frost as a complex artist who anticipated postmodernism a poet who invoked literary traditions and conventions frequently to set himself in tension with them Using the insights of reader response theory Judith Oster explains how Frost appeals to readers with his apparent accessibility and then because of the openness of his poetry's possibilities engages them in the process of constructing meaning Frost's poems she demonstrates teach the reader how they should be read at the same time they resist closure and definitive reading The reader's acts of encountering and constructing the poems parallel Frost's own encounters and acts of construction Commenting at length on a number of individual poems Oster ranges in her discussion from the ways in which the poet dramatizes the inadequacy of the self alone to the manner in which he reads the Book of Genesis or the writing of Emerson Oster illuminates finally the central conflict in Frost his need to be read well against his fear of being read his need to share his creation against his fear of its appropriation by others
