Pharmacology of Ganglionic Transmission D.A. Kharkevich,2012-12-06 D A KHARKEVICH The history of the study of ganglionic substances begins with the paper of LANGLEY and DICKINSON 1889 who established the ability of nicotine to block the neurones in the superior cervical ganglion This was a considerable discovery as the authors ascertained that impulses were transmitted from pre to postganglionic neurones in the autonomic ganglia Simultaneously they indicated the possibility of pharmacological influence upon interneuronal transmission in autonomic ganglia The idea of ganglionic receptors specifically sensitive to nicotine followed logically Later LANGLEY 1905 1906 considered the problem of receptors with respect to neuro effector synapses It is remarkable that he was one of the first to put forward the theory of chemical mediation of excitation the nervous impulse should not pass from nerve to muscle by an electric discharge but by the secretion of a special substance at the end of the nerve LANGLEY 1906 p 183 In addition LANGLEY JOHN N LANGLEY 1852 1926 D A KHARKEVICH 2 and his collaborators managed to define the topography of autonomic ganglia more precisely by means of nicotine It should be mentioned that it was he who introduced the terms autonomic nervous system and parasympathetic nervous system U.S. Environmental Protection Agency Library System Book Catalog United States.
