Furness Library:

Furness Library Edward R. Bosley, 1996-10-10 Cloaked in its brilliant mantle of brick fiery terracotta and red sandstone the University of Pennsylvania Library stands as the mature period masterwork of Philadelphia's premier Victorian era architect Frank Furness. Conceived in consultation with two eminent library theoreticians the library plan evolved from practical experience with the inadequacies of nineteenth century library buildings the result was a modern factory for learning a machine for the use and storage of books. Furness's rationalized plan expressed on the exterior as a bold design was challenged for decades and anti Victorian sentiment threatened the edifice with demolition as late as the 1960s. Renewed appreciation has since come full circle however culminating in a dramatic interior restoration by the eminent Philadelphia practice Venturi Scott Brown and Associates. Frank Furness's academic monument thus stands today as a defining architectural landmark of Philadelphia.
