turn up for the meeting at Tamauranui Then they wont have any idea where I might even be what a predicament I try to look at my watch as the luminous hands should tell me what time it is but I find the face is all broken not much help there I flounder along and come across a giant of a tree I look up and see the trunk disappearing into the murky gloom but I am so tired I sit down and lean against the trunk I feel like going to sleep as my head falls down on to my chest my mind says wake up dont go to sleep stay focused have a small rest but get up and keep working things out My head aches and when I feel my head I find a large lump on my forehead no wonder I am in lala land After what seems like a few hour the rain slows down to a steady drizzle and finally it stops It becomes lighter as though the clouds are slowly going away hopefully I may be able to see something soon It must be nearly morning I see a line of fence posts but when I look closely the tops of the posts disappear under the water I wont be following them thats for sure On the other side of the fence in the distance I can see what looks like an old barn it looks quite run down I dont think it will be any good to me anyway how do I even get over to it I have run out of time to finish this story just as well it is fiction
