Higher Education And Its Communities:

Higher Education and Its Communities Ian McNay, 2000 Universities and colleges have long been seen as academic communities. This book explores how the nature of these communities is changing under pressure for autonomy to be balanced by accountability and from resource constraints from the state that is now a sponsor or client rather than a patron leading to competition rather than collegiality. It also explains the positions of higher education institutions in relation to their regional communities, minority groups, the work of the European Community and links to employers and learning in the community at work and elsewhere. The final section of Higher Education and Its Communities looks at how new technologies open up the global community but also may affect relationships within the learning communities at the heart of higher education's core functions and looks at the danger of a control culture in a community where IT allows indeed requires a record of activities and transactions that are open to surveillance. Nevertheless the values of the academic community live on even in societies with a historical oppression and that is the message of the book's final chapter. Community Engagement in Higher Education W. James Jacob, Stewart E. Sutin, John C. Weidman, John L. Yeager, 2015-06-17 There seems to be renewed interest in having universities and other higher education institutions engage with their communities at the local, national and international levels. But what is community engagement? Even if this interest is genuine and widespread there are many different concepts of community service outreach and engagement. The wide range of activity encompassed by community engagement suggests that a precise definition of the community mission is difficult and organizing and coordinating such activities is a complex task. This edited volume includes 18 chapters that explore conceptual understandings of community engagement and higher education reforms and initiatives intended to foster it. Contributors provide empirical research findings including several case study examples that respond to the following higher education community engagement issues: What is the community and what does it need and expect from higher education institutions? Is community engagement a mission of all types of higher education institutions or should it be the mission of specific institutions such as regional or metropolitan universities, technical universities, community colleges or indigenous institutions while other institutions such as major research universities should concentrate on national and global research agendas and on educating internationally competent researchers and professionals? How can a university be global and at the same time locally relevant? Is it or should it be left to the institutions to determine the scope and mode of their community engagement or is a state mandate preferable and feasible? If community engagement or community service are mandatory, what are the consequences of not complying with the mandate? How effective are policy mandates and university engagement for regional and local economic development? What are the principal features and relationships of regionally engaged universities? Is community engagement to be left to faculty members and students who are particularly socially engaged and locally embedded or is it or should it be made mandatory for both faculty and students? How can community engagement be better

Higher education is in a time of crisis diminishing funds rising costs lack of student preparation for college work low morale among students and faculty strained relations between faculty and administration and confusion about curriculum and educational goals Tierney believes that the problems are moral He suggests that by following principles used by Gandhi and Martin Luther King institutions of higher learning can model themselves on communities of brotherly love and service to humanity Tierney presents several case studies of postsecondary institutions and shows how academic structures give privilege to some ideas and constituencies and silence others He weds critical theory to postmodernism to derive a workable orientation toward multiculturalism on campus Tierney's rare book embraces critical theory and honors postmodernism simultaneously It is about academe but it is accessible by the layman Through a series of ethnographic case studies of postsecondary institutions the author uses critical postmodernism to offer a series of practical solutions to some of the most vexing problems of education Tierney's goal is to orient college life toward multiculturalism Tierney takes the essence of critical theory and distills the core ingredients of postmodernism He makes them work together in order to identify the difficulties in perceiving and reacting to the inner and outer workings of the human psyche Critical postmodernism addresses five axes of contention boundaries versus border zones individual constraints versus pluralist possibility political versus apolitical hope versus nihilism and difference versus agape or generalized love Ethnographic studies follow the theory Deep Springs College in the California desert a school with 26 students and seven faculty gay faculty in academe a private liberal arts college with a student body of 2 000 and a faculty of 150 cast in the traditional mode of higher education private college engaged in strategic planning in the Northeast and the creation of the San Marcos campus of California State University The study concludes with a discussion of cultural citizenship and educational democracy and endorses the methods of ethnography as essential to refining perception and suggesting ways of improving the college experience Place-Based Community Engagement in Higher Education Erica K. Yamamura, Kent Koth, 2023-07-03

While an increasing number of universities have or are committed to engaging their campuses in their surrounding communities many recognize they lack the strategic focus and resources to maximize and sustain their impact on those communities Place based community engagement provides a powerful way to creatively connect campus and community to foster positive social transformation In developing community engagement strategies most universities and community organizations face significant challenges in deciding who to partner with and why Frequently this leads universities and community organizations to say yes to too many opportunities which significantly limit their ability to pursue long term impact Focusing on an established geographic area can make it much easier to decide where to deploy resources and which partnerships to prioritize and thus increase their ability to form strong and sustainable partnerships that are of greater value to all stakeholders This book presents the emerging model of place based community engagement as a powerful process for attaining more positive and enduring results in their local communities as well as stimulating wider engagement by campus constituencies Drawing upon the concept of collective impact and using data driven decision making place based initiatives build long term partnerships based upon a shared vision Done thoughtfully these place based initiatives have attained impressive results Drawing upon the case studies of five institutions that have implemented place based community engagement initiatives the authors provide guidance on the opportunities challenges and considerations involved in putting a place based approach into effect By sharing the experiences of these five institutions they describe in detail the routes each took to turn their place based initiatives from concept to reality and the results they achieved

Marginalised Communities in Higher Education Neil

Harrison, Graeme Atherton, 2021-08-26 Drawing on examples from nine countries across five continents this book offers anyone interested in the future of higher education the opportunity to understand how communities become marginalised and how this impacts on their access to learning and their ability to thrive as students Focusing on groups that suffer directly through discriminatory practices or indirectly through distinct forms of sociocultural disadvantage this book brings to light communities about which little has been written and where research efforts are in their relative infancy Each chapter documents the experiences of a group and provides insights that have a wider reach and gives voice to those that are often unheard The book concludes with a new conceptualisation of the social forces that lead to marginalisation in higher education This cutting edge book is a must read for higher education researchers policy makers and students interested in access to education sociology of education development studies and cultural studies
