Makleff, 2012 Edouard Manet painted five versions of The Execution of Maximilian The three oils lithograph and oil sketch differ in style focus size and media but retain a composition that quotes an earlier painting by Francisco Goya Contradictions appear to define the group of paintings the artist and the circumstances Manet was the painter of modern life that avoided history paintings and rejected traditional style but here he portrays in grand style an obscure execution of an Austrian prince sent to rule Mexico by the Emperor Napoleon III Manet attempted to show and publish these works despite his contentious relations with the academy willing to risk his freedom by depicting a topic embarrassing to the ruling dictator His political associations with anti Empire activists suggest that his interest in the subject matter had political undertones In subtle and less than subtle means Manet points the blame for the death of Maximilian on the French regime He does so through visual means innovative technique references to modern and old masters sources and elements committed or omitted to the canvas Indicative are his choices to portray the firing squad in French style military uniforms and inaccuracies that create ambiguity and lack of clarity To model the sentiment of horror Manet includes a group of spectators and highlights their reaction with an additional light source It was Manet s commentary on canvas The response was immediate the censors ordered a ban on its display and publication Manet, the Execution of Maximilian Juliet Wilson Bareau, 1992 Inexpressiveness made a strong political statement and became a potent symbol of failed imperial ambition Edouard Manet and the Execution of Maximilian, 1981 Study for the Execution of Emperor Maximilian by Edouard Manet - 1867 Journal Ted E.
