From A Girls Point of View Lilian Bell,2004-10 Every woman has had at some time in her life an experience with man in the raw In reality one cannot set down with any degree of accuracy the age when his rawness attacks him or the time when he has got the last remnant of it out of his system But a close study of the complaint and the necessity for pigeon holing everything and everybody lead one to declare that somewhere in the vicinity of the age of thirty five man emerges from his rawness and becomes a part of trained humanity a humanity composed of men and women trained in the art of living together      Petar's Rose Emil Zivadinovic,2024-02-02 Set in the little known backdrop of Serbia in the year 2000 Petar s

Rose unfolds in a world seemingly insulated from external influences offering a glimpse into a setting exotic to Western readers It s a time marked by the aftermath of wars and isolation where the young protagonist immersed in a dreamlike state grapples with the harsh reality of loss Refusing to accept the passing of a girl he loves he embarks on a quest to reconnect with his lost love delving into ancient beliefs and forgotten lore daring to cross into unknown realms Despite its themes of loss and longing the story radiates with joy and humour painting a vivid portrait of life in a unique and extraordinary society The narrative offers a perspective seldom encountered by Anglo American audiences a protagonist who despite his education finds himself helplessly caught between the contrasting worlds of the West and the East the present and the past This tale is a genuine testament to the resilience and spirit of an individual living on the fringes of Europe navigating the complexities of love tradition and identity      Seeking & saving.
