Women at the Threshold of Globalisation Narendar Pani, Nikky Singh, 2014-04-04 The popular perception of globalisation is rooted in its image of dissolving senses of distance and boundaries It is so preoccupied with the technology that enables globalisation that little attention is paid to questions of how and where the circuits of globalisation actually get realised This book attempts a more nuanced view of globalisation by focusing on its less explored non technological dimensions It examines the transformation of the woman worker from a rural woman to an urban one from a dependent daughter wife and mother to an earning member and from a homemaker to a factory worker and the attendant transformation of the home into a base for migrant workers None of these transformations is absolute as the woman worker continues to play the traditional roles of wife and mother at home alongside fulfilling her responsibilities at work In the process of negotiating boundaries in the village city home and global factory she confronts a reality that she fears because of its unfamiliarity coping with which necessarily entails falling back on her kin networks institutions that are rarely seen as enablers of globalisation although they play a critical role in determining how globalisation is sustained Focusing on such workers in Bangalore a city otherwise known for its IT industry the book examines the global garment circuit especially the institutions and processes outside the workplace that influence how the global circuit is completed It will appeal to those in economics sociology gender studies urban studies as well as to those interested in issues relating to globalisation
